BALLINGER DENOUNCED BY GIFFORD PINCHOT

In Statement to Congressional Committee Former Forester Declares Secretary of Interior Is "Dangerous Enemy to Conservation."

ACCUSES HIM OF DISLOYALTY TO PRESIDENT

Water Power Sites Withdrawn by Roosevelt Restored to Public Domain Within Month After Change in Administration. Glavis "Faithful Public Servant," Says Witness.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.—With Gifford Pinchot on the witness stand, the Ballinger-Pinchot inquiry entered its second phase today.

The dismissed chief of the forestry, before being sworn, dramatically declared that when his story had been told the country would demand a verdict "in harmony with the general conviction that the secretary of the interior has been unfaithful to the public, whose property he has endangered, and to the president, whom he has deceived."

L. R. Glavis, the Cunningham coal claims and Attorney Brandeis, all were set aside to make room for Mr. Pinchot, for Attorney George Wharton Pepper, his personal counsel, and his story of Secretary Ballinger's dealings with the water-power sites of the public domain.

Mr. Pinchot accused Secretary Ballinger of having made an explanation of his conduct to the President that was "essentially false," and charged him with being a "dangerous enemy to conservation." He charged him with having made a statement shown by undisputed documentary evidence "to be absolutely false in three essential particulars." He charged him with having "wilfully deceived the President," and of being disloyal to the President.

Mr. Pinchot's first hours on the witness stand were as replete with sensation as had been promised and the suffocating crowd in the hearing room hung intently upon every word that fell from his lips. [illegible] maintained a confident poise thereafter.

Conversations With Taft.

His recital had not progressed very far, however, when there came an objection from Mr. Ballinger's attorney as to the witness repeating conversations with President Taft. It was contended that the relation of these conversations would put the President in an attitude where he would either have to remain silent or else appear before the committee as a witness which, it was declared, would be undesirable.

The question was argued for some time, and during his statement of the matter, the attorney for Mr. Pinchot admitted that President Taft, in a letter written [illegible] of what [illegible] asked at the interview [illegible] of Mr. Pinchot. The matter was put over for consideration by the committee, and it is expected a decision will be announced when the next session is held Tuesday morning.

Mr. Pinchot followed up the vigorous attack made upon Secretary Ballinger in his opening statement by declaring he fully believed in Special Agent Glavis and was convinced all Glavis had said was true. He characterized Glavis as a "faithful public servant," and declared the facts which he presented "proved that Mr. Ballinger had been unfaithful to his trust

FORMAL CHARGES AGAINST BALLINGER MADE BY FORMER FORESTER PINCHOT

Gifford Pinchot, taking the witness stand at the afternoon session before being sworn made to the committee this statement of his charges against Secretary Ballinger

"What I desire to lay before the committee is a consecutive story of my experience with Mr. Ballinger in relation to the conservation of natural resources. Among several other matters there are three of principal importance to be called to your attention.

"The first of these concerns the policy devised and inaugurated by the last administration of protecting against monopolistic control the water power sites owned by the people.

"I shall show you that Secretary Ballinger entered his office with the clear determination to make short work of that policy; that he reversed it so far as he was allowed to do so; that he restored the power sites to entry without the remotest idea of re-withdrawing them, and that finally when I charged him last autumn to the President with being an enemy of the policy of conservation, he capped the climax by giving to the President himself an explanation of his conduct that was essentially false.

Secretary Unfaithful to Trust.

"The second has to do with my connection as government officer with the Cunningham coal cases and with the Glavis charges. I shall show you how the forest service became involved in these cases and how Glavis submitted his facts to me. I believed then, as I believe now, that he told the truth. I am convinced now, as I was when he came to me, that Glavis was a faithful public servant and that the facts which he presented prove that Mr. Ballinger had been unfaithful to his trust as a servant of the people, and as the guardian of public property of enormous value.

"I shall show that since I learned the facts you have heard from Glavis and others which I am about to lay before you, I have acted steadily in the light of them, as it was my duty both as a public officer and as a citizen to do. I shall show you that in pursuance of that duty I laid before the President both by word of mouth and in a letter of November, a statement of my conviction that Mr. Ballinger has been a dangerous enemy to conservation.

"I shall show you that this letter was submitted by the President to Mr. Ballinger and that as part of his reply he laid before the President a statement concerning the Cunningham coal cases, which statement is shown by undisputed documentary evidence to be absolutely false in three essential particulars.

"It will then appear that Mr. Ballinger wilfully deceived the President and was disloyal to him. The third principal matter is concerned with the attitude of this government in law and administrative practice toward the conservation of the natural resources belonging to the people.

"I desire to show you that the story of Glavis' courageous and successful fight to protect the property of the people which ended in his dismissal without a hearing, is but a single chapter in the history of the public lands. I shall show you that under our present law and practice the more difficult task falls on those who would protect the public property and not on those who would despoil it, and that under the present system the betrayal into monopolistic control of what belongs to all of us is made easy, and, often in practice, inevitable.

"The imperative duty before this country is not merely to get rid of an unfaithful public servant. A far more important duty is to bring about a fundamental change in the law and the practice toward conservation, to prevent for the future what has been in the past the almost inevitable sacrifice of the public welfare and to make possible hereafter the utilization of the natural resources and the natural advantages for the benefit of all the people instead of merely for the profit of a few.

"When this story has been told and the witnesses whom I shall ask you to call have been heard, you will realize that the interests of the country are not safe in Mr. Ballinger's hands, and the public demand of this committee a verdict in harmony with the general conviction that the secretary of the interior has been unfaithful both to the public, whose property he has endangered and to the President, whom he has deceived."

MILITIA NIPS IN BUD RACE RIOT IN ARKANSAS

Mob Attacks Negro Quarters in Village After a White Man Had Been Shot.

ELDORADO, Ark., Feb. 26.—Following the wounding of three white men, the formation of a mob and an attack on the negro section of the city, Eldorado tonight is under control of the militia, and what threatened to develop into a serious racial clash has been suppressed for the time being at least.

The disorder began early in the afternoon when a white man was crowded from the sidewalk by a negro. Bystanders took a hand and the negro drawing a knife, made a lunge at one of his adversaries. No one was injured and the negro escaped

Early tonight a posse of citizens started a search for the negro, who had taken refuge in a resort. The negro and his friends fired a volley of revolver shots as the invaders entered. Oscar Reynolds, Edward Reynolds and Roscoe Montgomery were wounded, the last probably fatally.

The mob quickly formed and had begun the destruction of negro cabins and property when Governor Donaghey was appealed to and the Eldorado militia company was ordered out. The crowds disappeared at the appearance of the soldiers.

OLD Y. M. C. A. BOARD OF PUEBLO RESIGNS

PUEBLO, Feb. 26.—The last obstacle in the Pueblo Y. M. C. A. fight, which was caused by sectionalism, was removed today when the old board of directors resigned in favor of a new board which has been elected. The site for the new $100,000 building is to be selected by a board of arbiters residing outside of Pueblo.

BELMONT WEDS ACTRESS

Marriage of Miss Eleanor Robson to Millionaire Banker Quietly Celebrated in New York.

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—August Belmont, Sr., the banker and millionaire racehorse owner, and Miss Eleanor Robson, who recently left the stage, were married at 5 o'clock this afternoon in Miss Robson's house here. There were no bridesmaids or ushers, and the guests were the immediate family and intimate friends.

The bride was given away by her cousin, Charles Robinson Smith, and Arthur Lithgow Devereux of Boston, Mr. Belmont's classmate at Harvard, was best man. Immediately after the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Belmont left for a trip through the south.

In March they will sail for the Mediterranean.

Mr. Belmont is 57 years old. His wife died in Paris in 1898. He has three sons. Miss Robson gave her age in taking out the marriage license as 31.

WESTERN SECTION MEETS ON SATURDAY

THROAT SPECIALISTS CONVENE AT ANTLERS HOTEL.

Dr. Solenberger Is Chairman. Other Prominent Local Physicians Will Give Addresses.

The western section of the American Laryngological, Rhinological and Otological society, which, in plainer words, is an organization of the throat, nose and ear specialists of the states west of the Missouri river, will hold its annual meeting in Colorado Springs next Saturday. Afternoon and evening sessions will take place at the Antlers hotel. Dr. A. R. Solenberger of this city is chairman of the western section, and is a vice president of the national organization. He will open the convention with an address, and papers will be given by the following Colorado Springs physicians. Dr. Gerald B. Webb, Dr. James A. Patterson, Dr. Frank L. Dennis, Dr. P. F. Gildea and F. S. McKay. Dr. J. R. Robinson will participate in the discussion.

This conference is the last one of four to be held in the United States, others having already been held in the eastern, southern and middle states, and will be followed by a national meeting in Chicago on May 1. Membership is limited almost exclusively to physicians practicing in diseases of the throat only, who are comparatively few in number.

While the coming convention here will be attended by scarcely a dozen doctors, it will be of great importance, both to the medical profession and the public. It will be the first meeting of the society to be devoted almost entirely to the prevention of disease rather than the cure, and the question of the examination of school children will be one of the principal subjects discussed

Many of the members, including Dr.

LIBERAL DONATIONS FOR CANNING FACTORY

Work on Main Building of $60,000. Plant for Fountain Will Begin About June 1.

At a special meeting of the Fountain Commercial club Friday night, the committee appointed to raise funds and secure a suitable location for the proposed $60,000 canning factory which W. C. Johnston of this city, president of the Fountain Valley Land and Irrigation company, has promised to build, reported that it has received liberal donations and have secured an option on a [illegible] suitable site. As soon as Mr. Johnston approves a site, the preliminary work will commence. Work on the building is to start about June 1, which will allow the factory to run during this season. Arrangements have been made to secure seeds from [illegible] crops in order to do away with all experiments with the vegetables to be canned in the factory. [illegible] of these seeds is to be planted.

ROOSEVELT AND SON KILL GIANT ELANDS

[illegible] Plans at New York.

GONDOROKO, Soudan, Feb. 26.—Theodore Roosevelt, his son Kermit, and their party arrived here this evening on the Belgian gunboat Bochi. All were looking well.

Colonel Roosevelt, in the last expedition, killed one bull eland while Kermit killed a bull and a cow. They had devoted from 12 to 14 hours daily to the chase. The heads of the animals are considered extraordinarily fine

Colonel Roosevelt said tonight he would hunt no further unless Lake No, on the lower Nile, offers an easy opportunity to secure specimens of rare animals he has failed to get.

Colonel Roosevelt's American flag was the first seen in the Congo since the days of Stanley. The natives bestowed upon Colonel Roosevelt names similar to those given to Stanley, and in fact, seemed to look upon the Roosevelt party as similar to that led by the famous explorer. The expedition will start on Monday for Mongalla, where plans are being made to give Colonel Roosevelt an enthusiastic reception. Mongalla is being decorated with flags and the Belgian officials at Lado have made a giant American flag which will be flying high when the guest arrives.

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—Mayor Gaynor will appoint a committee early next week to extend New York's welcome home to ex-President Roosevelt upon his return from Africa and Europe

This was announced today following a suggestion to the mayor from Collector of the Port William Loeb, Jr., that preparations to greet the distinguished traveler be made. The full personnel of the committee has not been decided, but active plans to make the return of New York's most famous liv-

KANSAS CITY, Feb. 26.—Another poison has been found in the [illegible] of Col. Thomas H. Swope and Chrisman Swope, according to a report made to the family by Dr. Ludvig Hektoen, Dr. Walter Haines and Dr. Victor Vaughan

An announcement to this effect was made here today by one of the Swope attorneys. He refused to go into details regarding the [illegible]

MOBS ARE SCATTERED BY TROOPERS IN PHILADELPHIA

Several Riots Break Out in Kensington District After Day of Tranquillity.

CLUBS ARE FREELY USED

Motormen Beaten and Policemen Roughly Handled—Rioting at South Bethlehem.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 26.—After a day of almost complete tranquillity several small riots broke out in Kensington late today when young men attacked cars run by nonunion men.

In one of the affrays passengers were attacked by strike sympathizers. A motorman was dragged from his car and badly beaten and several policemen were roughly handled but no one was seriously injured.

The most serious affair occurred about 6 o'clock at Front street and Susquehanna avenue. The crowd there got beyond the control of the local police force and stopped a car at the intersection of the streets. The crowd tried to reach the nonunion crew, and though the four policemen who was protecting the crew fought bravely, several men dragged him into the street. His revolver was taken from him and he was given a severe beating. The conductor managed to get away but the motorman was not so fortunate. He fired several shots, but all went wild and he was pulled from the car and also beaten.

Use Clubs Effectively.

Other police waded into the mob, but, reluctant to draw their revolvers because of the women and children caught in the crowd, fought with their clubs.

"Here come the state cops," some one yelled, and there was a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] drove up on the sidewalk, [illegible] right and left with their hickory sticks and gradually forced the mob back

Men, women and children were treated alike. No revolvers were drawn by the troopers but they made good use of their riot sticks and the rioters were soon on the run.

In the fight, Mrs. J. C. Ehler was struck with a brick and rendered unconscious. Walter Graham, who tried to carry her from the car, was attacked by the mob and roughly handled, but managed to carry the woman into a drug store.

The first trouble in the negro section occurred today where a mob

PACKERS WILL RESIST EXTRADITION PROCESS

Chicago Beef Barons Indicted in New Jersey Form Plans to Fight to Last Ditch.

CHARTER MAY BE LOST

Demand to Be Made for Dissolution of National Packing Company if Records Are Withheld

CHICAGO, Feb. 26.—A [illegible] contest is in sight over the expected move of the state of New Jersey to extradite the Chicago beef barons. The indicted millionaires through their attorneys are preparing to fight extradition to the last ditch. A lawyer for one of the largest packing companies today put the case this way:

"The Chicago packers [illegible] acted no [illegible] in New Jersey. Therefore it is [illegible] impossible for [illegible] any crime in that state, [illegible] they are not fugitives [illegible] and can not be extradited. It is true that the charter of the National Packing company requires that the annual meetings of the corporation shall be held in New Jersey, but every one knows how such meetings are held. Some attorney votes the proxies and that is all there is to it. The stockholders of the National Packing company never go to Jersey City personally to hold meetings

"It has been shown by [illegible] in Cook county that [illegible] sought from another state [illegible] in the state in which [illegible] while was [illegible] be classed as a fugitive [illegible] Even in [illegible] this rule was held good."

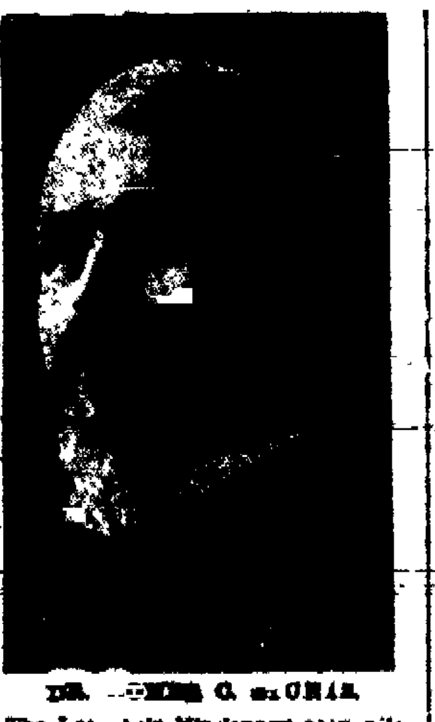

[illegible]

James E. Bathgate, Jr., an [illegible] agent of the National Packing company, and the only one of the indicted meat packers now in the state of New Jersey, today placed himself at the disposal of Prosecutor Garvan of Hudson county where the conspiracy indictment was voted.

Developments of great importance to the packers may follow, [illegible] for it affords the opportunity for a "test" case to determine the validity of the indictment. Although there are 21 individual defendants named in the blanket indictment the [illegible]

WANTS YOUNG BLOOD TO COMMAND NAVY

PRESIDENT TAFT SENDS MESSAGE TO CONGRESS.

Urges Legislation to Improve Fighting Force—Secretary Meyer Plans 32,000-Ton Battleship.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.—Young blood in the commands in the navy was the keynote of a special message which President Taft today sent to Congress urging legislation for improving the personnel of the fighting force, and to remedy what the President termed "an abnormal condition, the result of past legislation."

Under the existing system officers being trained now in command of battleships and armored cruisers could not serve as flag officers.

The President indorsed a bill prepared by Secretary Meyer which would promote officers to the grade of rear admiral at an average of 54 to 55 years and to captain at the average age of 46 to 47.

These changes, the President thinks, do not provide men young enough for the duties, but he feels they are a decided improvement.

The President recommended a change to create higher ranking of flag officers. The size of the fleet now demands two grades above rear admiral, it was stated. In the Atlantic fleet there should be an admiral in command, a vice admiral, a second squadron and two rear admirals for the other two divisions. The personnel should be based on tonnage. With 1,200,000 tons of ships as now authorized, the ultimate personnel would reach 3,000 line officers and midshipmen and 60,000 enlisted men.

Plans 32,000-Ton Battleship.

Building a world's record-breaking battleship of 32,000 tons displacement, at a cost of $18,000,000 and making the United States the leading naval power, are planned by Secretary Meyer, he is said to have told the House naval committee today.

The members of the committee stated the secretary's radical plans were favorably received by the committee. The secretary did not refer to naval strength in number of ships or armament, but to various features of improvement of the efficiency of ships and guns.

The proposed giant battleship waits until next year only because the naval experiments with 14-inch guns have not been completed and the department desires to know the result of full experiments. Tentatively, it is planned to arm this great battleship with a battery of 14-inch guns of the latest type.

Naval Increase Program

It was tentatively agreed upon today that the naval increase this year, based on the secretary's recommendations shall be as follows:

Two 27,000-ton battleships, equipped with either 12 or 14-inch guns.
One repair ship.
Two colliers.
Five submarines.

The submarines are for the Pacific coast and are the first of a fast fleet of those vessels which will be provided within the next few years. These submarines will be capable of making a speed under water of 12 knots an hour.

A member of the committee said the government had unofficial information to the effect that Japan was already laying the keel of two great battleships approaching the 32,000-ton limit.

cutor may proceed against them one at a time.

It is believed the packers intend to bend all their efforts to have the indictment quashed in the case of Bathgate. If successful in this, the whole prosecution would be defeated.

If the indictment is held valid, the packers will have still further opportunity to test the seriousness of the case against them with Bathgate in the role of defendant.

Will Attack Charter.

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—Unless the minutes of the meetings of the directors of the National Packing company and other vital records are produced before the grand jury of Hudson county next Tuesday the New Jersey authorities will apply for an order dissolving the corporation and taking away its charter.

Further, unless the indicted directors appear in person to plead to the indictments within two weeks, capiases will be issued and the directors will be arrested wherever found. The authorities are prepared to go even to the length of putting the indicted millionaires in the Jersey City jail if necessary.

The action with regard to the books and records will be taken under the New Jersey corporation act of 1896. This provides that stock transfer books and records of annual meetings must be kept at the home offices of corporations. The minutes of the directors' meetings may be kept anywhere.

A grand jury subpoena applies only in the state, but if records outside the state are desired the chancellor or any supreme court justice has power under the act to issue an order compelling their production. Disobedience may be followed by an order of dissolution. Already notices have been sent to the home offices of the indicted corporations to have their counsel appear and plead to the indictments.

The packing forces held a council of war today at their New York headquarters, the offices of Krauthoff, Harmon and Mathewson. This was learned through the visit to these offices of Richard B. Lindabury of Elizabeth, counsel for the Prudential Life Insurance company, who has been retained by the packers. There Is Always One Fisherman Who Lands the Best Fish

A dozen men may start to whip the same stream Their lines are seemingly the same- their equipment equal, and yet at the end of the day one man will return with a full basket and the others empty handed or with only mediocre catches.

It's Much the Same in Merchandise.

The stores send their emissaries out to fish the streams of Commerce, yet where a dozen bring mediocre returns- one invariably comes home with just the right things at the right prices.

It is largely a matter of "KNOW HOW."

This store prides itself on its expert knowledge. It does not fish in barren streams nor with the wrong tackle.

It sends its buyers where the goods are. It sends buyers who have not only studied merchandise, but have studied the needs of Colorado women.

It does not buy what people are not likely to want.

It does not waste time on trash that gives poor service.

It gathers the best, the brightest, the practical things the world has to offer- the kind of things people want- and is able to sell them at prices they want to pay.

We only tell you about some of the good catches in our daily announcements.

But you will see for yourself.

GOVERNMENT DEFEATED IN IDAHO LAND CASE

Kettenbach and Others Charged With Conspiracy to Defraud, Acquitted by Jury.

BOISE, Idaho Feb. 26.—Within twelve minutes after the final words of instruction from the court had been read, the jury in the government ... against William Kettenbach, George P. Kester and William Dwyer, charged with conspiracy to defraud in timber land transactions, returned a verdict finding the defendants not guilty.

The speedy action of the jury created general surprise inasmuch as Judge Dietrich had instructed that each count in the indictment be considered separately.

Counsel for the defendants at once moved for an immediate trial of the remaining charges, involving alleged subornation of perjury. The motion, however, was opposed by Payton Gordon, special prosecutor for the government. He asked that the case go over to the March term.

Today's verdict ends a case which has been on the docket of the United States district court in Idaho for five years. Kettenbach and Kester at the time of the indictment were president and cashier of the Lewiston National bank. Last fall the men were indicted together with Clarence Robnett on a charge of embezzlement following the discovery of a shortage of $137,000 in the bank's accounts. These indictments still stand.

WESTERN SECTION HERE ON SATURDAY

Solenberger, favor the passage of laws providing for an examination of all children in the public schools by trained physicians and specialists, and it is likely that some such recommendation will result from the coming gathering.

Dr. Solenberger, who, as chairman of the west in society, will also attend the national convention, said yesterday that the question uppermost among throat specialists of the country at the present time is the prevention of the spread of disease of the upper respiratory tract, and that it is generally conceded by his profession that the most effective manner of combating the contagion is to see that the diseases are not communicated by one school pupil to another. He cited the example set by Chicago where he says, there is a law providing for a professional examination of the school children and where a corps of 40 nurses to assist in the work has become a part of the school system.

A recent law passed by the Colorado state legislature provides for an examination of the children in the public schools, which however, is merely carried on by the teachers and principals of the various schools. Already the first set of local examination reports has been made out and is in the hands of the superintendent of schools.

The program for the coming meeting follows in full.

The Program.

SALE CONFIRMED?

Denver Report Says Golden Cycle Is Sold—New $1,000,000 Company for Alaska.

According to press dispatches from Denver, confirmation of the sale of the Golden Cycle mine to an English syndicate for $3,000,000 was given in that city yesterday, but the formal transfer of property will not be made for three or four months, when the property has been checked over. In the same dispatch is contained the information of the forming of a new $1,000,000 company, known as the Alaskan Consolidated Mines company, to operate in Alaska. John T. Milliken, president of the Golden Cycle, and Tyson S. Dines, a trustee of the Stratton estate, are the principal figures in the new company.

While it is stated in Denver that part of the money obtained from the sale of the Golden Cycle is to be used in development of the Alaskan property, friends in close touch with Mr. Milliken's affairs say that the sale of the one company and the establishment of the other have nothing in common. H. McGarry, general manager of the Golden Cycle, who was called to Nevada several days ago by the death of his brother, has not returned to the city so that confirmation from him of the sale of the Golden Cycle could not be obtained yesterday.

Dunnington. The court held that trying to commit an assault, provided one has the power, is the same as committing the act. Snouffer denied that he had the power to assault Haun for he said that he couldn't run fast enough to catch Haun.

THE HERPES COMES OUT

Frequently Shows Itself in the Same Place Every Winter.

The herpes very frequently shows itself only in the winter time and in practically the same spot every year. When it breaks out, a little poslam should be at once applied, and this annoying skin affliction will quickly vanish. Poslam is the new skin remedy which has cured thousands of the worst cases of eczema and eradicated facial and other disfigurements of years' standing. The terrible itching attending eczema, is stopped with the first application, giving proof of its curative properties at the very outset.

In less serious skin affections, such as pimples, rash, herpes, blackheads, acne, barber's itch, etc. results show after an overnight application, only a small quantity being required to effect a cure. Those who use poslam for these minor skin troubles should immediately secure one of the special 50-cent packages recently adopted to meet such needs. Both the 50-cent package and the regular $2 jar may be obtained at The Robinson Drug Co., and The Owl Drug Co., and other leading drug stores.

Samples for experimental purposes may be had free of charge by writing direct to the Emergency Laboratories, 32 West Twenty-fifth street, New York City.

ODD FELLOWS NEED NATIONAL SANITARIUM

George Huddleston Writes on Subject in Organization's State Publication.

In The Colorado Odd Fellow, published at Denver, issue of February 15, George Huddleston, of Alabama, grand representative of the order and chairman of the committee appointed at the last Grand Lodge meeting to devise ways and means for securing a national sanitarium, has an article covering nearly three columns, in which he shows how decidedly advantageous it would be to have the one central institution

In his opening statements, Mr Huddleston points out that of all the disease common to man, practically but one of them, consumption, is of a nature that requires a specialized institution for treatment. He further shows that the great lack of hospitals for tuberculosis cases deprives the victim of the disease of scientific hospital treatment, his statistics showing that there is not one bed for every 30 tuberculosis cases in America

He points out three possibilities for the treatment of the disease by caring for patients in already existing institutions near at hand, either maintained by public funds or private sanitariums; the establishment of a sanitarium in every state jurisdiction of the lodge; the establishment of one or more sanitariums under the direction of the sovereign grand lodge.

To the first proposition he points out that the most serious objection is that private hospitals are too expensive and only a few states have a tuberculosis sanitarium where it would be possible to place the patients To the second proposition the objection is that few of the state jurisdictions have enough to provide for such institutions, and in others the climate is highly unfavorable.

This leaves the third proposition, the establishment of a national home, the most feasible Mr. Huddleston continues:

Sufficient Funds to Build.

"Our sovereign body has funds invested in securities more than sufficient to establish one sanitarium of 100 beds The costs of maintenance of a sanitarium for 100 beds would mean among our 1,000,000 members only about 3 cents a year per member. The cost of establishing such a sanitarium would be about $60,000, including site and buildings, or $75,000 with all equipment. The cost of maintenance would not exceed 25 cents per day for each patient in excess of what these sick brothers are now drawing as sick benefits to say nothing of the funeral benefit, which will be a clear saving Surely it is worth while, when we are now losing annually so much from tuberculosis

With 12,000 consumptives constantly enrolled in our membership, there is hardly a single one of our lodges which has not from one to five or more sick brothers who need attention. In some cases the long continuance of the disease makes an unbearable burden upon these lodges In view of the fact that the majority of cases that are treated at home are not cured, most of them become a burden upon the lodge with which they are connected In many cases, lodges have been broken up by the great expense of the long continued illness of one or two members

"A further need for a tuberculosis sanitarium for the Odd Fellows is seen in the fact that every case of tuberculosis which is allowed to come to the advanced stage without proper attention becomes a center of infection which means the spread of this disease to at least two additional persons Thus for instance we may be able to cure a consumptive in the early stages of his disease for $250 If we allow him to become an advanced case without proper treatment, we pay him more than this amount in sick and death benefits, and probably he has infected one or more of his children and we lose not only our brother, but also one or two of those who are near and dear to him, and for whom we are responsible

We need, then sanitariums where those of our brothers who are in the early stages of tuberculosis may receive treatment which will bring about a cure of their disease and where those of our brothers who are in advanced stages of the disease, and who are likely to spread tuberculosis to others may be isolated and cared for comfortably and humanely."

Mrs. T R Newbold returned yesterday from a week's visit with her mother in Penrose, Colo.

CRUM MAKES APPEARANCE

Charged With Embezzling $5 He Is Held in District Court on $3,000 Bond

Waiving examination in the justice court, G. A. Crum of this city, former deputy state boiler inspector, yesterday made his appearance in the west side district court in Denver, on a charge of embezzling $5. He was released on $3,000 bonds, Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Chapman of this city, who were on his bonds in the lower court, being accepted in the same capacity in the higher tribunal It is probable that he will be given a hearing near the end of this week, although the date has not been set. The specific charge against Crum is that he took $5 paid to him by the Pueblo Canning company for boiler inspection on September 29, 1909

Information was filed in the same court against former State Boiler Inspector Alexander E J. Whitney, charging him with embezzling books and certificates of the state of Colorado with regard to boiler inspection on February 10 1910 He was released on the same amount of bond as Crum.

Gray and Faded Hair Restored

To Lustrous Beauty by Marvelous Discovery

Never before have the men and women of this country been offered such a great opportunity for preserving their beauty. Never before has it been possible to completely restore gray and faded hair to its original color in such a quick, safe and natural manner.

You can add to your beauty and take years from your looks through the use of this wonderful preparation. It not only brings back the original color to the hair, but add a lustre which is highly pleasing.

Liberal Sample Free

This clear, pure preparation is wonderful in its action. Its results are quick and complete. It restores gray or faded hair to its original color in a natural, healthful way in from 4 to 14 days.

The hair can be washed, curled with a hot iron or put to any test and you will find that the color is in the hair through and through and is lasting and natural.

Do not confuse Mary T. Goldman's Gray Hair Restorer with Hair Dyes. The market is crowded with troublesome Two Bottle Dyes and poisonous Sugar and Lead preparations which you can recognize by the white or yellow sediment which must be "shaken before using" and which are not only greasy, sticky and disgusting to use but in addition bring about worse conditions than existed before the treatment.

There's no use trying to conceal the fact that your hair is gray or faded if the results reveal the truth. Gray hair or faded hair is much preferable to thin hair with three or four different shades.

Mary T. Goldman's Gray Hair Restorer is different than other preparations because it cures the cause. It's neither greasy nor sticky and is as pure as water. It's pleasant to use, easy to apply, healthful in its work and lasting in its results.

Just write me a letter, tell me the exact color your hair originally was, or better still, send me a lock of it. I will send you absolutely free of all charges a sample bottle in a plain package which will in no way reveal the nature of the contents and with it I will send, also free, a special comb for applying it.

Use the Restorer on a lock of your hair. Follow our simple directions for applying it and you will then know beyond question that Mary T. Goldman Gray Hair Restorer is all I claim it to be and more. Not once in thousands of tests has it failed.

One full size bottle, price $1, is sufficient in most cases to restore the original color. Send for free sample today—right now while you think of it. Address

MARY T. GOLDMAN, Goldman Building, ST. PAUL, MINN.

Full size $1.00 bottles for sale by all dealers, including The Robinson Drug Co. For sample bottle write direct to St. Paul and be sure to mention the original color of your hair.

as the guardian of public property of enormous value."

Ballinger Blocks Movement.

The conservation begun under the administration of President Roosevelt was progressing splendidly up to the time President Taft and Secretary Ballinger took office, declared Mr. Pinchot. He charged that in less than a month thereafter, Secretary Ballinger had practically broken the backbone of the central idea of the conservation movement by restoring previously-withdrawn waterpower sites to the public domain and laying them open to private appropriation and monopolistic control.

Mr. Pinchot declared when the restorations were made, Mr. Ballinger gave no hint that he would rewithdraw the power sites and that as a matter of fact he did not rewithdraw any of them until after Mr. Pinchot had gone to the President and had made a vigorous protest.

The restorations by Mr. Ballinger were made without any investigation of the subject whatever, said Mr. Pinchot, and he charged the secretary with having deliberately ordered the officers of the reclamation service, against their will, to recommend that some of the restorations should be made. Mr. Pinchot declared Director Newell of the reclamation service would be called as one of his witnesses to prove his charges against Secretary Ballinger. The former secretary of the interior, James R. Garfield, it was announced, would also be one of Mr. Pinchot's backers.

Says President Was in Error.

One of the most dramatic incidents of the day was left for the last half hour of the session when Mr. Pinchot declared there was no such decision by the comptroller of the treasury as had been cited by President Taft in his letter of September 13, 1909, to Secretary Ballinger dismissing the Glavis charges and authorizing the removal of Glavis.

The President had contended that Mr. Ballinger had acted under decision of the comptroller which permitted of no appeal, when he had abrogated a co-operative agreement with the agricultural department whereby the forest service was given control of the forest reserves on Indian lands.

Mr. Pinchot admitted there was an opinion by the comptroller which forbade the detail of a clerk from the forest service to the Indian office, but contended it had nothing whatever to do with the work of the forest service in the field.

Mr. Pinchot's implication that President Taft had either been misled or was utterly mistaken brought out a rapid fire of questions from Senators Root, Sutherland and other members of the committee. They read into the records the various decisions of the comptroller which, they contended, had a bearing on the matter, but Mr. Pinchot would not withdraw from his position that there was absolutely nothing in the decision which President Taft must have referred to, which in any way warranted the abrogation of the co-operative agreement by Secretary Ballinger. He decided, in fact, that a previous opinion specifically held that the agreement was lawful.

This feature was temporarily passed over, but it was very evident from the statements made by members of the committee they would take it up more fully before Mr. Pinchot was excused. Indications were, when adjournment was taken, that the former forester would be on the stand for some time to come.

Fought an Alaska Reserve.

One of the minor charges made by Mr. Pinchot was to the effect that Mr. Ballinger, as commissioner of the land office in 1907, protested against the creation of the Chugach forest reserve in Alaska. The reserve was created over his protest, however, and includes most of the Cunningham coal claims.

The forenoon session was devoted in part to a further examination of W. W. Barr of Seattle, as to the agreement now in effect between him and L. R. Glavis as to securing timber lands in Washington. Barr said Glavis was able to give him information as to the location of available lands, which he had never been able to procure before, and the effort of the committeemen was clearly directed toward bringing out the fact that Glavis within two months after he had left the government service was engaged in making use of knowledge gained as a public servant for the benefit of private parties, just as he charged Secretary Ballinger with doing after retiring from office as commissioner of the general land office.

Barr said if the deal he and Glavis had entered into was carried through Glavis' share in the profits would amount to about $10,000.

The cross examination did not show that Glavis had committed any impropriety in accepting the employment which Barr offered. Barr said he and Glavis had an agreement that if the land should be acquired they would share alike.

Kennedy Is Recalled.

Andrew Kennedy, the former coal expert of the general land office, was then called to the witness stand.

Kennedy read the letters of instruction which Glavis had written him directing the field examination of the coal lands in Alaska.

It figured much work in harmony with Special Agent Wingate, the coal expert sent out by the forest service. It was shown that Wingate represented that there was no coal on the claims. To correct the impression Chairman Nelson insinuated that Glavis had dictated Kennedy to co-operate with Wingate in his findings as, if he had done so, he would have been obliged to report "no coal." Kennedy said he had received no such instructions from Glavis who had given him no directions as to what his report should be but merely requested that he should work in harmony with Wingate.

Mr. Vertrees read, and Mr. Kennedy identified, a letter he had written to Glavis from Alaska showing that he and Wingate had not agreed as to the coal bearing character of the lands under investigation. Witness was impressed with the fact that there was coal, while Wingate, representing the forest service, which wanted the land returned to the forest reserves, reported that there was little coal on the properties. Kennedy estimated that there was 90,000,000 tons of coal in the Cunningham group. He said the Alaskan coal fields were very valuable.

Deposits of Vast Value.

Careful examination, he declared, was necessary. The coal, he declared, was very gaseous and unless proper precautions are taken much of it may be destroyed by fire. "There are three kinds of coal in Alaska," he said, "lignite, bituminous and pure anthracite, although it is not as good as the Pennsylvania anthracite."

Witness said he found veins from 1 to 14 feet in width. He found outcropping 26 feet in width. For steaming purposes Alaska coal is as good as any.

Kennedy said the field he examined in which the Cunningham group is located, is about 15 miles long by five wide. In 26 years of experience he had never known a section so rich in coal. He estimated it would cost $1.75 per ton to mine it and at the mouth of the mine it would be worth about $2.25 per ton.

It would be worthless, however, without the facilities to the seaboard and then it would be necessary to have a suitable harbor on reaching there.

SAYS HE WILL MAKE REPLY TO COMMITTEE

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.—Gifford Pinchot's opening statement to the Ballinger-Pinchot inquiry this afternoon was read by Secretary Ballinger in his office late today. Tonight he gave out the following statement to the Associated Press:

"In view of the fact that I will presently have an opportunity to appear before the committee and acquaint them with the truth, I will not reply to the mendacious aspersions which Mr. Pinchot seeks to cast upon me. He attempted without success to deceive the President. He will find it will be equally difficult for him to deceive the committee.

"Obviously, the only deception in which he hopes to succeed is a temporary deception of the public through the press. This he has endeavored to do by giving out in advance the introductory statement which has appeared and which he has been malignant enough to present, but not quite reckless enough to state upon oath.

"Fortunately, as already stated, I will soon have an opportunity to give to the committee, and through the committee to the public, the facts and the truth, and for that reason I have no statement at present to make."

GIVES MESSENGER CHILDREN TO PARENTS

LA JUNTA, Colo., Feb. 26.—The sensational Messenger case collapsed suddenly today in the district court with the refusal of Judge McDaniel to dismiss the complaint, followed immediately by the announcement from Judge Hicks that he had no testimony to offer. Judge McDaniel said he would render his decision on March 8 but stated at the same time that he would not take the surviving children of the Messenger family from their parents. Judge McDaniel vacated the temporary order by which the Messengers were relieved of the custody of their children.

LAYMEN'S CONVENTION TO OPEN TUESDAY

march will then be to Temple theater, where the banquet that is to be the first event on the program of the conference, will be given. A number of notable addresses will be made in the course of the evening.

Throughout the Pikes Peak region a great deal of interest is being aroused in the forthcoming convention, and delegates are being registered more rapidly than ever before as the convention day approaches.

In the city churches this morning a final presentation of the matter will be made by pastors and laymen, and as a result of this, several hundred more delegates are expected to be added to the rolls.

A novel feature of the convention work will be a house-to-house canvass to be made in the business section of the city on Monday morning by some 30 business men who have agreed to give two hours of their time to the work.

On Monday evening at 6:30 there will be a final meeting of the co-operating committee at the Y. M. C. A. to close up all the details of the convention work.

Bishop Lewis Arrives.

One of the early arrivals in the city yesterday was Bishop W. S. Lewis of the Methodist church. Bishop Lewis has been stationed by his church in charge of its missions in China, and is thoroughly qualified to make a presentation of the missionary cause as it relates to the missionary cause in that great empire. Bishop Lewis has three meetings scheduled for today. He will preach at 11:30 a. m. and at 7:30 p. m. in the First M. E. church, and at 3:30 p. m. he will address a great interdenominational mass meeting at the same church, particularly in the interest of the Laymen's Missionary convention. Bishop Lewis, who is said to be an able and eloquent speaker, was formerly president of Morning Side college in Iowa, and is particularly equipped to discuss missions from first-hand knowledge.

Another arrival was Dr. J. H. Trimble, field secretary for the Laymen's Missionary movement for the middle west. Dr. Trimble has charge of 15 conventions in some 10 states. He brings some very interesting news concerning conventions which he has attended in the last few days.

"Our convention at Topeka began on February 22, and was remarkable in point of attendance considering the size of the community. There were 1,311 men at the opening dinner. There were 2,000 in the audience on Wednesday night, and 3,500 on Thursday night. We used the auditorium, the largest building in the city."

"Our Kansas City convention was opened on Wednesday, February 23, and ... We had 1,870 men at the opening dinner and ... obliged to stop selling tickets at noon on Wednesday. We could have easily sold 2,000 tickets. It was the largest dinner of ... There were 1,700 registered delegates, and the auditorium of the ... M. E. church, South, was filled at every session. threw missiles at cars. Policemen soon scattered the crowd.

Leader Released on Bonds.

The arrest and arraignment of John J. Murphy, president of the Central Labor union, on a charge of inciting to riot, and the disorders noted marked the eighth day of the strike.

Murphy was released in $3,000 bail. Three newspaper men were reluctant witnesses. They finally admitted that Murphy uttered the words attributed to him in an interview. He referred to the mayor as a puppet and said if one man was shot by the police a carnival of riot and bloodshed would follow, the reporters said.

Whether or not a strike of all organized labor in Philadelphia will be called next week probably will be decided at tomorrow's meeting of the Central Labor union.

Riot at Steel Works.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, Pa., Feb. 26. One man is dead from a bullet fired by a state policeman, two others are suffering from slight pistol wounds, and more than a dozen men are nursing injuries inflicted by the heavy riot sticks of the troopers tonight.

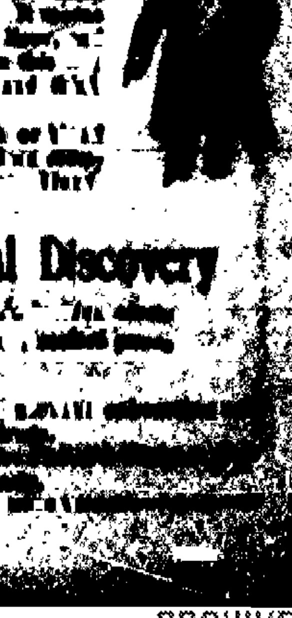

The troopers were patrolling the streets near the steel works when bricks were thrown at them by a crowd of foreigners. The commander of the troops ordered his men to fire into the air, it is said, but one man had his pistol too low, and the bullet struck Joseph Sambo, who died later.

Labor leaders have appointed committees to urge the foreigners to refrain from attacking the police.

Magazine Notes

It is quite evident that one cannot wither, nor custom stale the infinite variety of Lippincott's Magazine. Each month it bobs up serenely with a first-class complete novel, seven or eight entrancing short stories, and a wealth of miscellaneous matter, all timely and readable. There may be dull lines here and there, but they are lost sight of in the general excellence.

The March issue opens with a romance of the automobile, "The Substitute," by Eleanor M. Ingram. This is a remarkable piece of fiction remarkably interesting, remarkably realistic. There are thrills all through it, and the description of the motor race at the end is so vivid and enthralling that it affects one very much as would one's actual presence at the track. The characters are all splendidly depicted, and the love interest is wholly charming. Lippincott's has published many fine novelettes, but there is no question about "The Substitute" ranking among the very best.

Other magazines cover the fields of fiction, history, science, etc., and do it well, but the exclusive field of human life—with its wealth of material, stranger, more fascinating than any fiction ever penned—is covered by but one publication, and this is Human Life. Its pages are an epitome of the vital history of this marvelous twentieth century.

Naturally, with such a field, no definite program for 1910 can be prearranged. At the threshold of the year who can tell what great events are on the making on the loom of Time—what vast discoveries, what revolutionizing inventions, what colossal undertakings?

Back of each and every one of them stands some man or woman whose brain and hand and unique personality make possible these things, and it is the intimate and wonderful life stories of these people that will fill the pages of Human Life for 1910.

For the immediate present Alfred Henry Lewis will continue his enlightening series on President Taft and the inside history of men and affairs at the nation's capital. J. Vance Thompson will be to the fore with an illuminating article on Jaurès, the Red Orator, his residence in Paris giving him peculiar facilities for getting at the inside facts in the matter. Charles Edward Russell will have an absorbing story on the "Mystery of Dreyfus," while the regular departments of "Celebrities at All Sorts," "Actresses of Today," "Modern Mortals," etc., will continue to be crisp, up-to-date and entertaining as ever.

The March issue of The Outing Magazine is a special motor boat number, covering the entire field from the selection of the boat to the law governing its use, with such articles as "Motor Boats a Man May Buy," "On Inland Water Paths," "The Hunter and the Motor Boat," "Motor Boats and the Law."

The "New Idea in Athletics," by Walter Camp, is perhaps the sanest word ever spoken for sane athletics.

"Finding the Country Home," by E. P. Powell, offers many a suggestion and timely hint for the home seeker.

"The First Meet of the Man Birds in America" covers the recent aviation meet in Los Angeles illustrated with many striking and exclusive photographs.

"On the Road in Ceylon," a penniless tramping expedition through that wonderful island—a true example of Yankee pluck.

In addition, there is a host of photographs touching on other forms of recreation. There are two live short stories, "The Road to Happy Valley," by Emmet F. Harte; "The Nester on Carrizo," by Francis Alden Seltzer. "The Automobile on Tour," by Robert Sloss, describes the pleasures of that form of recreation, and "Damascus the Imperishable," by Albert Bigelow Paine, takes the reader into the midst of one of the most attractive and mysterious cities of the Orient.

A notable feature of the March number of Scribner's Magazine is the frontispiece, reproduced very accurately from a photograph direct from nature in colors by the Lumiere process. This and other beautiful Lumiere pictures accompany an article on "Color Arrangements of Flowers," by Helen Rutherford Ely.

Mr. Roosevelt's sixth article, "Trekking Through the Thirst to the Sotik," is an entire change of scene and interest from the preceding narratives. The educational value of these articles in reproducing the life of Africa is attracting wide attention. The life of the pioneer is pictured in his African narrative just as in "The Winning of the West" and other of his books Mr. Roosevelt so faithfully interpreted our own early days. In this article he shows the work that is being accomplished by the French Catholic and American industrial missions. "Many parts of East Africa," he says, "I believe will be made into a white man's country; and the process will be helped, not hindered, by treating the black man well." The trek across the Thirst (as any waterless country in Africa is apt to be called) is a picturesque journey. The porters on this occasion were helped out with ox-wagons. Among the animals hunted were the topi and the eland.

Always a notable publication, the March Harper's deserves the chief place of interest among the periodicals of the month, in that it gives to the world the most important Shakespearean discovery that has been made in two centuries. "Shakespeare as a Man Among Men" is a wonderful revelation that Professor Charles William Wallace of the University of Nebraska has been able to make through the finding of documents bearing intimately upon Shakespeare, which have been lying untouched for 300 years in the archives of the English law courts. They give a glimpse of Shakespeare's daily life in London that is unique, and will go far toward throwing new light upon any problems of the great dramatist's life and works. A new feature of Shakespeare's is among the discoveries. Ellsworth Huntington, of the Yale Expedition to Palestine, writes of Palmyra, "The Ancient Queen of the Desert," and pictures its imposing ruins in a series of photographs. Prof. G. Stanley Hall, president of Clark university, contributes an important paper entitled "A Child's Institute," dealing with the tremendous advances now making in the scientific study of children, out of which the new science of pedology is being evolved. Among the eight stories in the number, there is notable work from such writers as Elinor Macartney Lane, Emery Pottle, Mrs. Henry Dudeney, James B. Connolly, Alice Brown, and Fanny Heaslip Lea. Paintings in color by Howard Pyle, and drawings by other prominent illustrators add to the attractive illustrative ensemble that Harper's always maintains.

Captain Turner said that he had never passed through such weather in all his career as seaman. The Business Man and the Missionary Convention

"Every business enterprise is connected with Foreign Missions, whether men believe in converting the heathen or not.

"Missions not only promote but create commerce. Ipecac and quinine and India rubber were discovered by Missionaries; the first steamship on African Lakes were built for missions; plows were first sold in Turkey by American Missionaries, Yankee clocks have followed Yankee School teachers from China to Peru.

"Look at your desk, your mucilage and stamps owe a debt to the Arb. Your eraser and handle of fountain pen came from South America. The graphite of your pencil came from Siberia, and the finest grade of ink from China. If you are in the drug or grocery trade, look at the list of oils, gums and barks, and see what we owe to heathen lands. Uganda will soon support American carpet sweepers. It ought not to take a business man long to see that missions pay, for in the business world no man liveth to himself."

Hear what a score of the ablest speakers on missionary topics from foreign fields have to say on this proposition at the Laymen's Convention to be held next week. A registration fee of $1.00 admits to all sessions of the Convention with an additional 50c to pay for the dinner in Temple Theater on the opening night. See E. T. Heald, No. 45 Bank Block, or C. B. Hall, Y. M. C. A.

TO JUDGE VALUE OF IMPROVEMENTS MADE

Trustees Will Begin Preliminary Work Wednesday on Home for Mental Defectives.

As a preliminary task to the work of building a home for mental defectives in the state, the trustees, acting in conjunction with the state land board, will begin Wednesday to inspect the site for the home near Arvada. The members of the board are B. F. Lowen of this city, C. D. Griffith and Thomas F. Daly, both of Denver, and their principal task will be to reach a decision with the tenants of the land which is under lease, as to the amount due for improvements. It has been announced that the $70,000 appropriated for the home by the last legislature is available, and as settlements are reached with the lessees, this fund will be drawn on by vouchers.

The ground donated by the state land board for the home comprises 310 acres, and in the last two or three days notice has been served to the lessees of the termination on leases. Every effort will be put forth by the board of trustees to get possession of at least a part of the land immediately, so that construction of the building can be started without delay.

BURRIS GIVES LETTER WRITTEN BY OWENS

Former Dump Superintendent Says Douglas Bernard Got Ore Worth $20 Per Ton.

In answer to the letter of Douglas Bernard, which was published recently, assailing statements made by President A. L. Burris of the El Paso Consolidated Gold Mining company, Mr. Burris yesterday issued the following letter, including that received by him from "Vint" Owens.

Burris' Communication.

Allen L. Burris, President El Paso Consolidated Gold Mining Company, Colorado Springs, Colo.

"Dear Sir and Friend—I worker for Mr. Dug. Bernard, and sorted ore for him in his ore house that he built next to the El Paso ore house, and what come out of the El Paso ore house in the cars was dumped into Dug. Bernard's ore house, and was not run out on the dump, and I have got as high as $20 assay out of the screenings that come over Mr. Dug. Bernard's screen in his ore house that come from the El Paso ore house.

"This statement I will testify to any place.

"Yours very respectfully,
"VINT OWENS."

In view of the above letter it is amusing to contemplate Mr. Douglas Bernard's statement of February 24, which says he only shipped $64,104.19 gross, when, as a matter of fact, the ore records in the El Paso company's office in this city show that there was shipped from his so-called dump lease $101,986, in the two years and seven months said lease was operated by him. And it is also a fact that during the month of December, 1906, that the shipments ran as follows:

	Tons.	Value
Lot 1730	24,530	$21.30
Lot 1734	24,365	16.30
Lot 1743	23,612	13.34
Lot 1740	15,911	23.80
Lot 1764	22,628	14.00
Lot 1795	24,745	15.00
Lot 1765	22,864	16.10
Lot 1806	22,194	17.60
Lot 1818	9,273	44.40

It is furthermore conceded that the books of the company show that at different times during the two years and seven months the so-called Douglas Bernard dump lease was operated, that the ore over his screens shipped as high as two and one-half ounces gold per ton, valued at $20 per ounce.

These facts need no affidavit to make them TRUE.

DIXON PLAY STIRRING

"The Clansman" a Crude but Moving Melodrama, Well Written but Indifferently Acted.

"The Clansman," Thomas Dixon, Jr.'s drama of the reconstruction period in the south which followed the Civil war, had its first local productions at the Opera House yesterday afternoon and evening. There has not been an attraction in the Opera House in many seasons which called forth the enthusiasm and well-defined approval that "The Clansman" received at both performances yesterday. Colorado Springs audiences, generally cold and unmovable, forgot themselves and after one of the more stirring scenes of the play created a real panic of applause, the like of which is rarely heard in this city.

So much had been said of the Dixon play before its coming to this city and so much sensational advertising had been done, that one expected to be disappointed in the drama itself, anticipating a weak exposition of one of the most stirring and terrible periods in all American history. Dixon's handling of the theme, though decidedly melodramatic and at times weak and crude, is surprisingly good for it is a tremendous idea, big enough to tax the powers of some of our greatest dramatists. The author has drawn his characters so well that the rather poor cast seen yesterday could not entirely dispel all the original charm of the writer's creations.

"The Clansman" Story.

As is well known, "The Clansman" tells of Ben Cammeron, a young southern man who loves a northern girl, Elsie Stoneman. Ben joins the Ku Klux Klan in order to free his state from the reign of the negro and the cheap white trash. Elsie discovers the fact and leaves him. Cammeron's little sister is murdered by a negro, and Ben, as leader of the Klu Klux Klan, executes the negro who committed the crime. Cammeron is court-martialed and threatened to be hanged for the act. Elsie goes to plead with the lieutenant governor, Lynch, a mulatto, for the life of her lover, only to be met with a shameful proposal of marriage. Lynch threatens to kill the girl if her father makes a move in the matter. Ben arrives just in time to save Elsie, having been released from jail by his band of the Klu Klux Klan. It is seldom that so moving a play is placed on the stage, and the climax of the last act is vivid and thrilling to say the least.

Material for Great Drama.

There is material for a great drama in those terrible times, which followed the war, in the south, and it can not be said that Dixon's drama is anywhere near being a masterpiece, but until that great drama is written, "The Clansman" may well hold the boards because of its historical as well as dramatic interest.

The company which presented "The Clansman" here yesterday had nothing brilliant about it, but was generally capable. The play is one that almost acts itself. Arthur De Voy played the role of Ben Cammeron. He is stiff, without much stage presence and lacks the dash and determination that this character should possess. Evelyn Faber as Elsie was adequate and in the scene where she pleads for her lover's life she rose above the other members of the cast. The best piece of acting of the evening was the negro mammy as played by Maude Durand. Joseph Garry as the negro lieutenant governor, a very strong part of many possibilities, got through with the role and that is about all. John B. Cooke as Austin Stoneman and Warren H. Townsend as General Forrest made good impressions. Williers Levis as Ben's father, was weak. The southern girls were well played and looked much like the daughters of the south.

GRAIN DEALERS CLOSE CONVENTION IN DENVER

Churches Now Use Newspapers

Unitarians Publish Their Doctrines Widely at Advertising Rates. Press Bureaus Common—All the Big General Religious Organizations Now Provide for Newspaper Publicity—Seek to Reach the Millions.

The general modernization of religion—which is more significant than any definite bit of news—is being shown this winter by a remarkable turning toward the newspapers for cooperation. The churches are joining hands with the press. It seems to have lately dawned upon the leaders of organized Christianity that, after all, the only way to reach all the people is through the newspapers. To that end the concerted movement of the home mission boards openly made an expenditure for advertising one of the principal items of its budget. No enterprise, be it the college Young Women's Christian association or the Laymen's Missionary movement, thinks of doing without a publicity adjunct.

The most conspicuous and successful general use of the newspapers as a religious agency is the case of the Unitarians. These "liberal" churches accept as their mission the promulgation of certain great truths. They say, with extraordinary breadth of vision, that their real success lies in leavening other churches and society in general, rather than in adding to their own denomination. So to reach the whole big public—or so much of it as their means will command—with their message, they have been carrying on for some time a systematic advertising propaganda.

"The Paragraph Pulpit."

This consists of reading notices inserted in a list of daily newspapers at regular advertising rates, in which is set forth not the distinctive claims and merits of Unitarianism, but its essential message. "The Paragraph Pulpit" as it is called is written by various leaders of the liberal churches. Frequently the secretary of the publicity department of the Unitarian denomination, Rev. Charles W. Casson, writes the little sermon himself. The enterprise is regarded as one of the missionary activities of the denomination, and is so supported. The sort of sermonette thus published may be seen from this sample:

"Who is the religious man, do you ask? The churchgoer, the pious professor, the man of many prayers and long, the reciter of a creed, the quoter of sacred phrases, the loyal supporter of an ecclesiastical institution? Perhaps. But there is a better than these and a more religious. The man who lives an honest life, bearing its burdens bravely and performing its duties patiently, who seeks to make the lives of those about him a little more happy, who puts something of his own self into every act that he performs, who lives well and loves well, he is the religious man."

Spreading Good News Widely.

More general is the practice of furnishing to the press for free distribution, the news of religious activities. The press agent is now a part of many big religious organizations. Usually, to differentiate him from the man who is boosting theatrical interests, he is called a "publicity department." As such he issues frequent news bulletins to the papers, supplies information to the newspaper men and handles the press end of the conventions of his organization.

The International Sunday School association has lately taken on such a man, Rev. John W. M Kim, who has gone from Nashville to Boston. The Young Men's Christian association regularly sends out stories of its work. Christian Endeavor has been vigorously and skillfully press agented throughout most of its history. The Laymen's movement has a press agent traveling with the team of speakers that is now holding meetings over the country. The Young Women's Christian association is looking about for the best way of relating its splendid work to the larger public. The Allied Foreign Mission boards had up the subject at their recent meeting. Several individual boards maintain publicity representatives and issue weekly or monthly bulletins. The Catholic Truth society does a most efficient press work. Perhaps the most efficient press work is that done by the Christian Science church. In addition to publishing a daily newspaper, the press bureau of which Mr. Alfred Farlow is the well-known head, has 2,500 correspondents in every part of the land. Whenever a reflection upon Christian Science is published anywhere it is promptly taken up by one of these press workers, who also do a constructive work in publishing the news of the Christian Science church.

Is a National Press Bureau Coming?

All these facts are but signs pointing to a larger development of the cooperation between churches and newspapers. It is known that the officers of the Federation of Churches which embraces all American Protestantism, have considered the matter of a national conference on press work and a national press bureau, to defend, as well as to promulgate, the interests of religion.

A commission is now at work to report to the World's Missionary conference in Edinburg next June upon the best methods of publicity for missions. This indicates how the general and larger aspects of the question are engaging the thought of the foremost religious leaders. Whatever is to be the future of the religious press—and that is a much mooted question in church circles—it is evident that the place of the daily newspaper in religious work is to grow larger steadily.

What the Churches Ask

The statement has been frequently made that as much space as is now given to sports or stocks or women's interests, will at no very distant date be demanded for the adequate treatment of religious manifold activities. At present, many important dailies give a special page to religion and all sorts of religious features are in use.

The need for some general and official co-operation on the part of the churches with the press is evident from the bewildering array of press bulletins, most of them loaded with propaganda which now deluge editors so that only an expert can sift the wheat from the chaff. Even Sunday school lessons, hitherto the most popular religious feature for dailies, are now sometimes found to be the vehicle for peculiar doctrinal tenet as in the case of a sect with headquarters in Brooklyn which widely disseminates its teachings through a "Bible Lesson." Even sermons are likewise employed for this service. Nonetheless there is evidently a tendency to use in the press the sermons of divines who possess the rare gift of popular writing.

A plan has about reached maturity whereby the foremost preachers, authors and educators will be secured to write a daily moral message for the newspaper press of the country. A great array of distinguished names has been secured in this connection. This, together with a multitude of local instances of the use of the newspaper, but illustrates the general proposition that churches of the twentieth century will probably employ the most modern methods for getting into touch with the people.

THE RELIGIOUS RAMBLER.

Mail Order House Dealt Severe Blow by Courts.

Apparent Low Prices Listed in "Big Book" Shown to Be Fraudulent.

Sears, Roebuck & Co., the Chicago mail order house has been ordered by the courts to pay damages of $13,750 to Charles A. Stickney & Co., St. Paul, Minn., manufacturers of gasoline engines. It is the result of a suit in which it was shown that Sears, Roebuck & Co. had fraudulently listed gasoline engines in their catalogues at a higher horse power than the engines possessed.

In the first trial, judgment was given against Sears, Roebuck & Co. for $10,000. An appeal was taken and a new trial granted on technical grounds, but the second award was even higher than the first $13,750.

It was shown in court that Sears, Roebuck & Co. had tried to involve Stickney & Co. in the alleged wrongdoing by asking them to make the same fraudulent claims of horse power in the Stickney catalogue. This they did not succeed in doing.

It was shown in court that Sears, Roebuck & Co. listed a 2½ horse-power engine in their "Big Book" as a 3 horse power engine, one of 4½ horse power as a 5 horse-power engine, one of 5 horse power as a 6 horse-power engine, and so on all along the line. It is estimated that Sears, Roebuck & Co. made from $15 to $20 additional on each engine by means of the higher-rated horse power.

It is an easy matter for dealers to advertise that they sell machines cheaper than other dealers, but when it is shown in court, as in this case, that the engines are not of the capacity advertised, it is wise for people who send their money to catalogue houses to know that they get what they order before they crow over their neighbor that they are buying so cheaply.—The Grand Rapids Furniture Record.

A few minutes delay in treating some cases of croup, even the length of time it takes to go for a doctor often proves dangerous. The safest way is to keep Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in the house, and at the first indication of croup give the child a dose. Pleasant to take and always cures. Sold by all dealers.

LARGE WOOD DEAL.

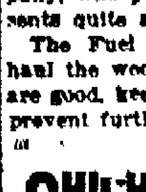

The rights to several thousand tons of seasoned pinion wood, to be taken from state lands, have changed hands during the past week.

It will interest residents of this city to know that all this wood is available for the market and will be sold here.

The deal was made between Mr. W. A. Outhier who has had the rights, and the Colorado Springs Fuel company, who purchased them, and represents quite an outlay of money.

The Fuel company state they will haul the wood in here when the roads are good, keep a large stock ahead and prevent further pinion wood famines.

PINCHOT'S CHARGES.

THE courage of Gifford Pinchot, as shown in many flares since the beginning of the present controversy, and most strikingly yesterday in his presentation of charges against Secretary Ballinger, commands admiration. There are plenty of people who oppose Mr. Pinchot because they have been misled by his enemies as to the real nature of his policies and practices while he was at the head of the Forest Service, but very few of them have ever questioned his absolute honesty and sincerity. The developments of the last few weeks have proved also that he has the backbone to stand up and fight for his convictions. The findings of the investigating committee may or may not vindicate him; it is largely a matter of whether the investigation is thorough and impartial; but of one thing we may be certain—Pinchot intends to see to it that the American people learn the whole truth concerning Richard A. Ballinger's connection with the public domain.

The charges made by Mr. Pinchot yesterday are startlingly bold. He declares that "Secretary Ballinger entered his office with the determination to make short work of the Conservation policy; that he reversed it as far as he was allowed to do so; that he restored the power sites to entry without the remotest intention of re-withdrawing them; and that, finally, when I charged him last autumn to the President with being an enemy to the policy of Conservation he capped the climax by giving the President his own explanation of his conduct that was essentially false."

A SHOT FOR MR. TAFT.

Mr. Taft's celebrated whitewashing of Ballinger is still fresh in the public mind, and it will be remembered that in that letter the President denounced Glavis, and that Attorney-General Wickersham in his accompanying report denounced Glavis and accused him of having "an exaggerated ego." Later Mr. Pinchot, in his letter to Secretary Wilson spoke of Glavis as a faithful and valuable public servant, whereupon the President removed Pinchot's official head, reproving him in the letter of dismissal for presuming publicly to vindicate Glavis after the President had already declared that gentleman to be "in bad."

Recalling this much of past history it is interesting to read the following excerpt from Pinchot's latest pronunciamento:

"The second charge has to do with my connection as a Government officer with the Cunningham coal case and with the Glavis charges. I shall show you how the Forest Service became involved in these charges and how Glavis submitted his facts to me. I believed then, as I believe now, that he told the truth. I am now convinced, as I was when he came to me, that Glavis is a faithful public servant and that the facts which he presented will prove that Mr. Ballinger has been unfaithful to his trust as a servant of the people and as the custodian of public property of enormous value."

There it is again an emphatic reiteration of the assertion that Glavis told the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth when he showed up the connection between R. Achilles and the Cunningham claim affair. In other words, Mr. Pinchot indirectly reminds the President once more that the divinity that doth hedge about a king does not protect him from an occasional reminder of his past follies.

A writer who would make such charges without being fully prepared to back them up to the last letter with such absolute and incontrovertible proofs as would stand in any court of justice would thereby confict himself of utter imbecility. Pinchot has been at it for many months, he is in a position to know whereof he speaks, and he has spent the winter carefully going over his case with his lawyers, clinching the last detail of evidence.

We can't help feeling sorry for R. Achilles Ballinger.

RELIABILITY OF MAILORDER HOUSES.

ONE of the big Chicago mailorder houses has been ordered by the court to pay damages amounting to $18,750 to a firm of gasoline engine manufacturers in St. Paul. It appears that the mailorder house listed in its catalogue engines made by this firm, but gave them fraudulent power rating. Thus a 2½-horsepower engine was rated at 3-horsepower, one of 4½-horsepower at 5-horsepower, etc. The manufacturers declared that the mailorder house thus made an additional profit of from $15 to $20 on each engine, and injured the reputation and standing of the engine by the false rating. This contention was sustained by the court, which on first trial rendered a judgment for $10,000. The defendant moved for a new trial which resulted in an even higher award.

This incident ought to be of interest to the many people all over the country who fondly imagine that they better themselves by buying goods from mailorder houses, especially from the two big concerns in Chicago which conduct an extensive business in every state. The prices quoted in the catalogue of these concerns are always alluring, and it is a source of wonder not to many how such prices can be made. The evidence in this case helps to explain, for it is an easy matter for anybody to offer goods at a low price by resorting to misrepresentation and deception.

It would be interesting to know how extensively this practice is indulged in by the mailorder houses; whether their customers are habitually humbugged in this fashion or only in occasional instances. At any rate the incident shows the folly of sending money away from home to somebody you do not know for goods you can not see and which generally can not be exchanged if unsatisfactory.

BENEFITS OF HOME TRADING.

Whoever buys merchandise from his home dealer is reasonably certain to obtain satisfaction because the dealer is on the spot and must deal fairly with his customers or he can not remain in business. When the various disadvantages of ordering by mail are taken into account, such as delay, liability to disappointment, etc., it is doubtful whether the buyer ever gets the best of the bargain.

Another aspect of this question, and a very important one, is the disastrous effect of mailorder buying on the home town. Many an American town and small city has been practically killed by the prevalence of the mailorder habit; indeed, examples are to be found in every state. Everywhere there are people who care so little about building up their own community—the community which gives them a living and in which all of their interests are centered that they will not spend a dollar in it until they have first examined a mail-order catalogue to see whether they can not save a few cents by sending away from home. Of course this practice can have only one result—it simply administers knockout drops to the business interests of the community, and when a town's business interests are paralyzed that town might as well go out of existence.

Money spent at home benefits everybody in the town, directly or indirectly, for it is passed from hand to hand, paying debts, buying goods, contributing to the prosperity of everybody that receives it. But money sent away to a mailorder house goes out of circulation as far as the home town is concerned. It will not be found in any working man's pay envelope, or add to the day's receipts of the grocer, the clothier, or the dry-goods man. And these considerations affect Colorado Springs as much as any other town.

ZOOLOGICAL ERROR.

From the Cleveland (Ga.) Courier.

Ask Claud Hulsey who the young man was that started to catch his horse to carry his girl to the phonograph party and by mistake tried to bridle a calf, and I guess he would have carried her, but it wouldn't take the bits.

A KANSAS HIGHBROW.

From the Emporia Gazette.

An Alma girl, who is considered as belonging to the high brow crowd, was the recipient of a serenade the other night and in telling a friend about it said: "I don't think there is nothing more nicer than to be woken up at night with vocal singing."

FINDING TASKS FOR MR. ROOSEVELT.

From the Providence Journal.

Is the old question, "What shall we do with our ex-Presidents," about to be revived? It was thought that Mr. Roosevelt had solved it, so far as it appertained to himself, by accepting an editorship on a weekly magazine, contracting to write for another periodical a series of articles on big-game hunting in Africa, and starting for the dark continent to obtain the material for these articles. But now that he is nearing the end of his hunting trip the public seems bound to find something else for him to do. The suggestion was lately made that he should be invited to dig the Panama canal, and more recently that he should be asked to discover the south pole. It is safe to say, however, that the ex-President will never be at a loss for a task. He has an abundance of resources, and there is really no reason why anybody should worry about his future occupation.

THE ANTI-PINCHOT CRUSADE.

From the Pittsburg Dispatch.

The industry of holding up hands in holy horror at Gifford Pinchot's plea of going beyond the law is prosecuted with much earnestness, to judge from an editorial in the Washington Post.

Mr. Pinchot, in a recent speech, referring to the question of paying the expenses of foresters in preliminary training work, cited, first, the section of the appropriation bill providing a general fund for the Forestry Bureau and authorizing its expenditure for the general and necessary things in the prosecution of that work. We do not, of course, pretend to quote the exact words, but the section was a blanket authorization for all necessary expenditures. From that point Mr. Pinchot argued the necessity of securing for working foresters the training necessary to make them efficient, and the impossibility of securing that efficiency in any other way, and arrived at the conclusion that, this being necessary to the proper work, it was in accordance with the purpose of the appropriation and lawful.

Whereupon the Post, entirely ignoring all the premises of this argument, exclaims: "Now Mr. Pinchot says that whatever is necessary is lawful." Certainly, when the legislative power has appropriated the money for whatever is necessary. We do not undertake to either indorse or deny the accuracy of Mr. Pinchot's premises. If the Post has attempted to show that there was no such general fund for necessary and undefined work, or that the training of the foresters was not necessary, that would have been fair argument. But we observe that it did not try that course but, instead, seized a single sentence of Mr. Pinchot's ignoring all the context, to comment on it in such a way as to amount to garbling.

RAILROAD ACCIDENTS.

From the San Francisco Chronicle.

For the quarter ending September 30, 1909, as reported to the Interstate Commerce commission, there were 352 persons killed by railroad accidents in the United States and 19,341 injured. Of those killed 184 were passengers or persons carried under contract, postal and express men, etc., and of these classes 4,413 were injured. All other casualties were of railroad employes. In regard to these figures the report of the commission says that "the only favorable indication that can be discovered in the foregoing statistics is that afforded by the fact that the totals of employes killed in train accidents and in coupling cars do not show such decided increases as do those of employes killed from other causes." In other words, the compulsory use of safety appliances and block signals and running lights on freight cars do have some effect in reducing the death roll.

Railroad casualities are in nearly all cases the fault of [illegible] on the part of some employe. It is this element of human fallibility that cannot be minimized. Of the forty-three "class A" accidents that is to which passengers were killed or property of the value of $10,000 destroyed all the twenty-four victims but two were obviously the fault of employes. Of the nineteen deaths only eight were clearly attributable to train or track employes, with two unexplained. The majority of the casualties occur in the yards, and are nearly always the result of personal negligence of the person injured more often than otherwise. It is this factor of personality which is most difficult to control. We do not control it in this country as it is controlled in Europe. Railroad managers say that the large casualty list is the consequence of a laxity of discipline, which, under conditions prevailing in this country, they are unable to prevent, but whose consequences fall most heavily upon the employes themselves.

One more week is softly closing, one more week of toil and care, and I'm sitting, gently dozing, in my good old rocking chair, thinking of the week behind me, and the thoughts that through me creep, with their little prods remind me that I'm pretty small and cheap. I've been fussy, mean and cranky, and my heart is full of guile; I denied the kid a Thankee when he hoped to earn a smile; I've been finding fault and snarling at my good frau, sitting there; if she wasn't just a darling, she would hit me with a chair. I've been growling o'er my labors, just as though no others toiled; I've been wrangling with my neighbors till they think my brain is spoiled. All my sins are small and futile, all within the law, I vow; but they loom up large and brutal, as I rake them over now. Had I licked some fellow mortal, so that cops would drag me o'er to the prison's gloomy portal, I'd respect myself the more, but that sort of crime's above me, it's too noble, clean and slick; I have nagged at those who love me, and I need a good swift kick.

END OF THE WEEK.

The Daily Chit-Chat

"Have a purpose. No one ever reached great things without trying for them. Thoughts of what is great, love for great ideals, daily acts done in a great spirit, prepare the hero's hour and bring it to him. Purpose makes or mars life. Purposelessness ruins life."—Anonymous.

"If I ever marry and have children," a man said to me the other day—it's an old joke you know that a man always says, "If I marry," and a woman, "When I marry"—"there is one thing that I am surely going to do and that is teach them as soon as they are able to think at all to begin to think about what they want to do when they grow up.

"Of course, they'll go through a good many stages before they find out what they really want. The boys will have the policeman and fireman stage, and the girls will probably have the actress and trained nurse stage, but if they are encouraged to think seriously of their future vocation they are more apt to find out about it in time to be preparing for it than otherwise. I'm sure if I had begun to think four or five years sooner of what I wanted to do I might be further along in my profession than I now am."

Now that strikes me as sound, common sense, if a "mere man" did say it.

I don't think there is anything that adds so much to the sum of one's happiness as having a definite purpose in life.

The little boy who has made up his mind to be the garbage man when he grows up, undoubtedly gets much happiness from his decision.

He has something to live for, something to look forward to.

Doubtless he will soon change his mind as to the desirability of that trade, but I don't think he will be as happy again until he sets up a new ideal—decides that some day he will be a policeman and twirl a club, or a sailor boy and climb masts.

If you have no aim in life, the future is just a lot of days; but an aim in life transforms those heterogeneous days into a glorious and fascinating some day.

And the sooner any young person finds out what he really seriously wants to be, the better foundation for his future he has a chance to lay.

It is one of the regrets of my life that I did not decide sooner that I wanted to be a journalist.

All through my high school and college days I expected to be a Latin teacher. If I might only pass that way again, knowing whither I was bound, what a very different store of treasure I would gather!

It seems to me that any young person who has given serious thought to the matter all of his life ought to know by the middle of his high school course if not sooner, what he would like to do, and ought to begin to bend his life in that direction.

And it seems to me that if I had young children about me, instead of trying to persuade myself that they would never have to grow up, I should try to turn their minds towards their future at the earliest possible age.

Suggestive Questions on the Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. Dr. Linscott for the International Newspaper Bible Study Club.

(Copyright, 1909, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D. D.)

False and True Discipleship. Matt. 7: 13-29.

Golden Text: Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Matt. 7:21.

Verses 13, 14.—In what sense is the gate of eternal life narrow, and the way to destruction broad?

What are the conditions for entering into eternal life?

If a man repents of, and gives up all his sins but one, why is it impossible for him to pass through the gate which leads to eternal life?

Verse 15.—Are there any false prophets these days, and, if so, describe them?

Is a pastor, or a Sunday school teacher, a false prophet if he preaches what he does not practice?

Verse 16.—If a man is a good husband, a kind father, an [illegible] neighbor, charitable, honest, and industrious, but does not belong to any church, what reason is there for us to conclude that he is not a Christian?

Verse 17.—If a man attends church and prayer meeting regularly, and takes part in the services, but is ugly and cross to his wife and children, what reason is there for us to conclude that he is not a hypocrite?

How would you class a woman, active in church and missionary work, who habitually repeats stories, whether true or false, against the character of her neighbors?

Verse 18.—From the teaching of Jesus, how would you demonstrate that a person may, or may not, be his follower who does not delight to do good, and having the opportunity, is not actively engaged in doing it?

Verse 19.—What is the law which operates, to eternally destroy the hope and happiness of all who persist in doing evil?

Verse 20.—What's the natural "fruit" of a follower of Jesus, and that of a follower of evil?

Verse 21.—Jesus intimates here, that a man may be quite successful in religious work, and yet be a worker of iniquity. Show how that can be possible?

How does God regard a man who prays, and yet knowingly commits sin?

Does not God expect, and is it reasonable to expect, that ordinary mortals can do His will in all things?

How do you account for the self-deception of men, who according to the teaching of Jesus, will walk up to the gate of heaven, thinking they are saved but to be turned back as workers of iniquity? This question must be answered in writing by members of the club.

Verses 24-27.—Does Jesus mean, that we are to do literally as His words read, in this sermon on the mount, or to take them as principles and do as he did, form the personal acquaintance of the Father, and then do His will in the details?

If a man loves God and his fellows, and is following Jesus in doing good, always being true to the voice of God in his soul, what reason is there to believe that, that is building upon the impregnable rock?

Verses 28, 29.—What was it that distinguished the teaching of Jesus from that of the scribes?

Lesson for Sunday, March 6 1910: Jesus the Healer. Matt. 8:2-17.

MUIR GLACIER IN VIEW.

For First Time in Nine Years It Can Be Approached from Sea.

From the Vancouver Providence.

Something wonderful has recently taken place in Alaska. This is the drifting away of icebergs from the front of Muir glacier, in Glacier bay, so that for the first time in nine years this famous glacier, the most noted on this continent has been visited. In 1899 a subterranean earthquake took place at Yakutat, and ever since the approach to the glacier has been so choked with ice that boats have turned away with their passengers, disappointed. Now, through some peculiar drifting of the ice, steamboats can enter the channel, and, after cautiously pushing their way, get a glimpse of the left face.

In the nine years away from the sight of man this glacier has shown remarkable changes. When Prof. John Muir, after whom it was named, visited it it had a solid face two miles long, about 250 feet above the water line. It was a five glacier, and great masses of ice toppled into the sea, with reverberations like thunder. Water would splash 50 feet high and the sight was fearsome and fascinating.

Today the glacier assumes a different aspect. Erosion has worked out a new bay, which will soon be charted, and the glacier itself seems to have two parts, the live part, from which icebergs break and fall with a tremendous noise, and a dead arm, or one with land forming between it and the sea. This change is due to a hill which projected through the top of the ice when Prof. Muir was there. Now that hilltop is a large mountain, dividing the ice fields. The ice has also receded in the nine years.

Most Remarkable Known.

This is without doubt the most remarkable known glacier on this continent, though Alaska has other wonderful glaciers which occupy clefts high up in the mountains and some of which have an elevation of 6,000 feet. Among these are the Taku Davidson, Windom and Le Conte. But Muir glacier has 354 square miles of ice and presents such an imposing sight that it is considered the crowning glory of Alaska's stupendous scenery—the sight of a lifetime. No one knows how it happens that Glacier bay can be entered now where it could not before, but it is thought that favorable winds and mild weather caused the ice to drift away.

Dead and Live Glaciers.

An interesting fact about Alaskan glaciers is that some are "dead" and others are "alive." Davidson glacier, which is really a tongue of the Muir glacier, has been ascended by traveler for a number of years. It is a dead glacier, having a moraine of several miles between it and the sea. Looking at it from the boat, it represents a kaleidoscopic appearance as the sun shines upon it, and the surface seems scratched with tiny pin lines. These are in reality deep crevices, which must be approached cautiously, for they are lurking pitfalls for the unwary.

EDUCATION FOR THE PRISONER

From the Commonwealth Club Transactions.

The State Board of Charities and Corrections says: "A large number of the inmates of both prisons are poorly educated; more than 10 per cent are illiterate. No doubt lack of opportunities for proper education has brought many of them where they are. Better home conditions, better education, would have made good men of many of those now in our prisons. It is the duty of the state to make a good man of every criminal if it can. To do this under the conditions now existing in our state prisons is impossible. But much could be done to educate the prisoners. There are some who will say that the convict is not entitled to any education and that the money of the state should not be spent in that way. Such a view is narrow in the extreme. The training incident to educational work in the prison would be of great value in inculcating habits of industry and thoughtfulness, thereby making for good discipline in the prison and for better character after discharge. The schooling received would give the prisoner a better chance to be self-supporting upon his discharge. It is apparent, therefore, that from selfish motives, if for no other reasons, the state ought to improve the educational facilities of its prisons."

TODAY IN HISTORY

The Stamp Act, February 27.

The famous stamp act, passed by the British parliament on February 27, 1765, will always remain an incident of great interest to Americans, as it was one of the leading causes in effecting the Revolution. This act provided for the raising of revenue in the American colonies by the sale of stamps and stamped paper for a number of different purposes. It also provided that the royal forces in America should be billeted on the people. The colonists, already angered at the various arrogant acts of the British parliament, refused to accept "taxation without representation."

The act was to go into effect on November 1, 1765, but it aroused intense opposition, led by the assemblies of Virginia, Massachusetts and other colonies. A "stamp act congress," with delegates from many of the colonies, met in New York in October, 1765, and a petition against this and other repressive measures was sent to England. The act was repealed in March 1766, but it was too late, the colonists had gone too far to retreat, and the events of great importance followed one another rapidly during the next 10 years, up to the Declaration of Independence.

News of its passage did not reach America until May, 1765, and the stamp agents were nearly everywhere compelled by the "Son of Liberty," to resign or to destroy their stamps, or both, while many of them were mobbed and much property was destroyed; so that by the time it was to go into effect the act had be[illegible] virtually nullified.

On November 1, the day it was to become operative, bells were tolled throughout the colonies, flags were placed at half-mast, and newspapers were put in mourning. It was during the debate in the assembly on the stamp act that Patrick Henry, a member of the body made his historic outburst: "Caesar had his Brutus, Charles the First his Cromwell, and George the Third may profit by their example. If this be treason make the most of it."

Matters became a little more quiet after the repeal of the stamp act, but only for a brief time, for the next move was for parliament to tax tea and other articles exported to America. The people began to understand that it was tyranny they were resisting. There was no more talk of sending representatives to parliament, and some of the bolder men, like John Adams of Massachusetts began to believe that there was no hope of relief so long as the colonies remained joined to the mother country. The people quietly resolved that they would neither buy nor drink any more tea if it had to be bought of England and the detested tax upon it paid. One thing after another led to constant quarreling, which finally resulted in the soldiers firing on the people in Boston, and the Boston massacre on the 5th of March, 1770, is looked upon as the first bloodshed of the American Revolution.

February 27 is the birthday of Henry W. Longfellow, the beloved American poet (1807); Thomas Conway, of the Conway Cabal fame (1733); John G. Gilbert, the well-known actor (1810); and General Russell A. Alger, Secretary of War under McKinley (1836). On that date was fought the battle of Moore's Creek Bridge, N. C., the first victory of the Revolution in 1776.

PARK BOARD RECOMMENDS MORE GOOD ROADS AND PLAYGROUNDS FOR CHILDREN

The park commission yesterday submitted its annual report to the City Council, and one of its features is the stress laid upon the importance of public playgrounds for children. It also points out that an increase is needed in the number of good roads in and adjoining the city. The report follows in full:

Report Park Commission.

To the Honorable the Mayor and Council of the City of Colorado Springs:

Gentlemen: In compliance with the law the park commissioners herewith present to your honorable body the annual report "of all moneys received and expended in the purchase, improvement and maintenance of parks, showing when, where, how and in what manner the same were received, expended and what improvements have been made during the year preceding the report."

During the year covered by this report there has been a steady and distinct increase in the use of the parks, boulevards and driveways. The marked features of the year have been.

1. The gift to the city of Colorado Springs of what is known the world over as the "Garden of the Gods;"

2. Preliminary steps for the purchase by the city of the South Cheyenne cannon and Seven Falls.

3. The marked interest taken by the women of the city in the proposed installation of playgrounds in various sections of the city.

The munificent gift of General Palmer to the city of the parks, boulevards and driveways has been generously supplemented by the gift to the city of the Garden of the Gods by the heirs of Mr. Charles E. Perkins.

Garden of the Gods.

This park, always the most visited of any of the scenic places near the city, has added greatly to our ability to give to our visitors a most delightful pleasure drive. We have always had a feeling of proprietorship in this near-by place of natural beauty and we experienced a grateful sense of relief when Mr. Perkins' heirs generously gave it to us upon Christmas in 1909, thus conferring upon the city the honor and distinction of really owning the Garden of the Gods and enabling the city to throw it open to our citizens and visitors for all time.

A suitable shelter house and refectory should be built in the Garden at the very earliest moment possible.

The grateful thanks of the city have been given to those who so generously gave this beautiful spot to the public.

The city will possess the most unique, varied and attractive park system for its citizens and its visitors if we are enabled to take over the South Cheyenne canon with its Seven Falls. This beautiful piece of natural scenery should belong to the people for their enjoyment and will furnish further inducement to bring visitors to our city. We trust that our citizens will approve the purchase and vote for the issue of the bonds necessary to secure the canon and add it to the park system of the city.

Playgrounds Needed.

The commissioners have always considered it their duty to provide, as soon as the means should be at their disposal, several playgrounds for the children in various parts of the city. They believe these small playgrounds are a necessity and should be provided at the very earliest moment possible. We may not need them as acutely as a populous city demands them for its congested districts, but even with our "outdoor" possibilities, they are required for the proper and liberal education of our children. The land in the different sections of the city, is not yet at our command, but we sincerely hope that our citizens will, at an early day, recognize the necessity for these small parks and willingly provide the means of obtaining them. The very general feeling in regard to such parks, expressing the beneficial results in those cities where they have been installed, is indicated in a recent report of one of the Chicago park commissions.

What Chicago Thinks.

"The small parks have become a vital factor in community life. They have become an organised neighborhood social center, uplifting the social, moral and physical life of the community. The swimming pool shower baths, playgrounds and the gymnasiums, outdoor and indoor recreation, all make for a better physical body and health . . . .

The atmosphere of these small parks is one of potent influence upon the lives of the boys and girls in the community, directing their youthful energies into channels of education and play, under the judicious and wholesome influence of the park management."

The commissioners desire to call the attention of your honorable body to the urgent necessity that exists for good roads, the necessity of an increase in the number of such roads in and adjoining the city and the wisdom of keeping them in good condition for the increasing travel of citizens and tourists. The drives that can be taken north, south and east of the city are unrivalled in their scenic beauty and we are neglecting a most valuable and available asset if we are not quick to see the advantage a reputation for good roads will give to the city, the county and the state. The commission is ready and anxious to co-operate, as far as lies within its powers, with other public bodies in their efforts to benefit the community in the building of serviceable and enduring good roads.

The report of the secretary and the financial report, with details of receipts and expenditures, accompany our report.

The commission gladly testify to the excellent service of all of the employes of the park department.

WORKING TO INCREASE INTEREST IN FLOWERS

El Paso County Horticultural Society Would Build Hall for Annual Shows.

With a special labor in view, that of erecting a building centrally located which can be used for annual shows and during the rest of the year be a museum of botany and geology, members of the El Paso County Horticultural society are putting forth extra efforts to enlarge the membership list of the organization. To this end, it was announced yesterday that any person interested in the work, may secure all particulars by communicating with any of the officers. The officers are: Dr. W. W. Arnold, office First National Bank building, president; E. L. Ralston, Ralston Brothers, commission merchants, vice president; J. F. Underwood, custodian Palmer hall, Colorado College, second vice president; W. W. Williamson, First National Bank building, treasurer; F. W. Homan, foreman Monument Valley park, secretary. The secretary is in his office at the county court house the second and fourth Tuesdays in each month after 7.30 p. m. Any of these officers will be glad to answer questions, either by mail, where return postage is included, or in person.

The El Paso County Horticultural society was organised in 1898, and the first flower show was held the same year. The first premium list contained 36 classes and the premium paid amounted to $29.75. In 1900 the schedule was 73 classes and 150 premiums paid. This year the schedule contains over 300 classes, with a total of $1,072.26 in premiums offered. All of this has had the sole object of cultivating the taste and judgment of the people in the knowledge of flowers, and while preparing something for friendly competition, homes have been beautified and the city has been adorned. Members of the society are of the belief that some of the marked improvements made in the city may be accredited directly or indirectly to the influence of their organization.

Commodious Building Planned.

The new building planned by the society is to be a hall large enough to accommodate its exhibits and to contain also a library room and an office. Its interior adornments will consist of flowers of this region, both pressed and photographed. Landscape pictures would occupy a place and children's prize sketches would be preserved and given an honored position. In the library the latest and best books and periodicals on flowers and floriculture and the beautifying of the homes and cities are to be placed. In other words, the organization's object will be to make the hall an all-the-year-round source of entertainment and instruction. Besides this, the hall would give Colorado Springs one of the best auditoriums in the state, save those in Denver, as only the wall space would be used for the permanent exhibits.

In the coming campaign for membership, the society will try to get its recruits from every walk of life, on the theory that the culture of flowers and the beautifying of the home is of interest alike to the [illegible]

Projected Car Line on East Fontanero Street Delayed Because of Hitch.

Owing to a hitch in the negotiations between the street railway company and the Santa Fe road, the building of the projected line out East Fontanero street to the new clubhouse of the Colorado Springs Golf club has been delayed. It is understood that the two companies agreed to install an interlocking device at the grade crossing on Fontanero street, each to bear one-half of the cost of installation and operation. The street railway people claim that the Santa Fe suggested a contract putting the watchman in charge of the interlocking device jointly for both companies. The street railway people would be responsible for the watchman when a street car was on the grade crossing, and in case of an accident to a car, the railroad would be immune from blame.

TOMMY BURNS ANXIOUS TO FIGHT JACK AGAIN

By W. W. Naughton

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 26.—Can Tommy Burns come back? That is the question the Australian sports are asking. After 12 months of ease and indolence, the lure of the ring is strong upon the Canadian and he wants to fight again. Since his defeat by Johnson the Australians have seen Tommy grow into a portly personage. Much automobiling and high feeding gave Tommy an obese appearance and it suddenly occurred to him a month or two ago that if he did not begin working off the avoirdupois, he would be eligible for the Antipodean Fat Man's club. That Tommy has not found the process of reducing the easiest thing in the world is suggested in one of his letters to the writer. He says:

"They can say what they like, but theatrical work is the worst thing in the world for a fighter."

Tommy means, of course, that fat forms and the wind becomes thick when a fellow deserts the roped enclosure for the footlights. That Tommy does not consider his case entirely hopeless is shown by his bellicose utterances. He wants to fight any man living, Jack Johnson for choice. Tommy's Australian friend, Promoter Hugh McIntosh, has made an offer of $40,000 for a Johnson-Burns fight, the same to take place months after the Johnson-Jeffries affair. Burns is willing to fight on a winner-take-all basis and McIntosh sends word that the offer stands good no matter how Johnson fares in his battle with Jeffries. McIntosh also offers to pay all of Johnson's expenses during the Australian trip.

It isn't likely that the bout will come to a head, however, unless there is a shrinkage in Johnson's demands for an increase in McIntosh's offer. When Burns and Johnson fought before Tommy received $30,000. Johnson says he must have the same amount for his share before he will become a party to the Australian match. Personally I do not think Burns has great expectations of securing a return date with Johnson, and I have reason for thinking that one of the important engagements of 1910 will be a 20-round fight between Tommy Burns and Sam Langford at the National Sporting club, London, next June or July. Woodman, manager of Langford, has practically closed with the English matchmakers for the contest named, and Burns has told his friends in England that about the only thing likely to spoil the Langford-Burns prospect would be a sudden resolve on the part of Jack Johnson to accept McIntosh's offer for a Burns-Johnson contest.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 26.—The national baseball commission today decided that the Vernon club of Los Angeles has failed repeatedly to furnish the proof demanded of its title to Player Devoy, and, therefore, St. Louis is adjudged not liable for the draft price.

TERRORS QUINTET IS BASKETBALL CHAMP

By defeating the fast Colorado City quintet, the Springs High School Terrors got a strangle hold last night on the city basketball championship. The Colorado City boys are third in the league, having lost three games. The Y. Reds come second with two games lost.

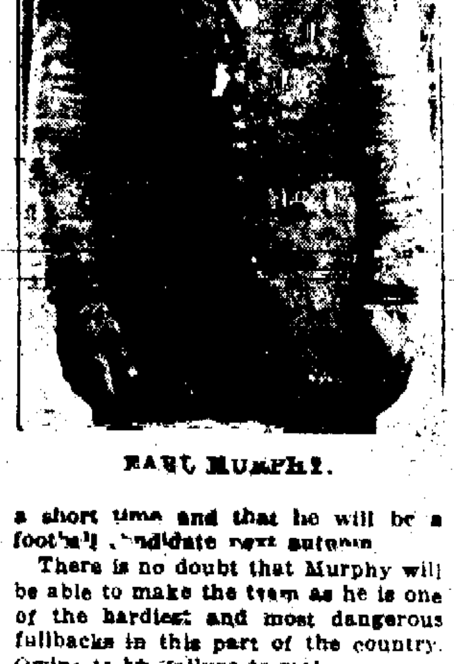

Captain Altman and Coach Grindle brought the Terrors through the championship season with a perfect score, although they lost a practice game to a picked Colorado City team. The Deaf Mutes are fourth in the league, with the Pirates fifth and the Boys club sixth.

Team work enabled the Terrors to count 44 last night, while the Colorado City five was getting a score of 26. The Reds won easily from the Pirates, 55 to 15.

MURPHY MAY BUCK THE TIGER

Colo. College Football Stars to Join Kan. Aggies?

Earl Murphy, the husky fullback with the handy boot, may get revenge on Colorado College, which barred him from the team on a technicality last fall, when he lines up with the Kansas Aggies next season. Murphy has announced that he intends to enter the Kansas Agricultural school in a short time and that he will be a football candidate next autumn.

There is no doubt that Murphy will be able to make the team as he is one of the hardiest and most dangerous fullbacks in this part of the country. Owing to his failure to make up some back work and because he dropped out of school a few days too early a year ago, he was barred from the team last fall, under the conference rules. Despite this, Murphy practiced with the Tiger eleven every afternoon and was the most feared of any of the second team men.

It also is rumored that big Dick Morrison, Colorado's best tackle, will be found with Murphy next fall wearing the colors of the Kansas Aggies. The Aggies will play the Tigers here next season.

LIGHTWEIGHTS TO GO TOGETHER IN FRISCO

Moran and Murphy Battle for Chance at World's Champion, Wolgast.

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 26.—English Owen Moran and Harlem Tommy Murphy will get together under Jim Coffroth's direction at Dreamland Monday night, and there is every reason for expecting one of the most exciting glove contests San Francisco has seen for many years. Moran and Murphy are rivals of a strenuous kind. They have had three meetings already, so that their case ... that of Jimmy Britt and Battling Nel... before the Battler finally manifested his superiority. In each of the bouts Moran and Murphy figured in they finished so closely that there was literally nothing to choose between them, and they have both looked forward to the day when they would meet in a 20-round contest in San Francisco.

FLAT FEET OF JOHNSON ARE MATES AND WIDEST, FLATTEST REASONS MAN EVER SAW ON ENDS OF SHIN BONES, SAYS VAN

(By C. E. Van Loan.)

NEW YORK, Feb. 26. The question of the chief second has been settled. Jim Corbett admits that he will be the man behind the human bearskin rug when Jeff and Johnson meet in the ring. Jim has been talking about the fight, but with an amount of restraint and caution foreign to his enthusiastic nature. Jim Corbett always was an enthusiast. There has never been any middle ground for him. In his vaudeville addresses, Jim has been touching ever so lightly upon the subject of the coming battle, with a few words of praise for Jeffries and a brief appreciation of Jack Johnson. After it is all over, when the casual spectator untangles himself from the whirl of words which Jim. J. has furnished, said spectator goes away with an impression something like this:

"Jim Corbett says that the men will fight. He will help Jeffries to get into shape. Jim thinks that Jeffries is a great fighter, but he also thinks that Johnson is a great fighter and a very tough proposition for Jeffries. Jim thinks that Jeff will win if he gets into shape, but in case ... "

"And then old John L., who has been showing over the New England circuit, comes along and says that the whole thing looks to him like a "barney." It is the difference in opinion, says Mr. Twain, which makes horse races. And fights."

Speaking of that difference in opinion, somebody started a fat argument when he came out with the stuff about Johnson being a flat-footed fighter. It wasn't a new argument to bring against Jack Johnson, but it attracted attention because when the argument was made the first time the big negro was a nine spot in the deck pugilistic and nobody cared how flat-footed he was, or whether he had any feet at all, and the next time they said it about him he was a champion of the world.

THEREFORE, When somebody peddled that scandal about Jack having flat feet there was an immediate ... from many quarters. It is a significant fact that as yet nobody has ... to deny that Mr. Johnson has flat feet. There are two reasons for this. They are mates and they are the largest, widest, flattest reasons a man ever looked at, and Jack Johnson wears them around on the ends of his shin bones. All the patent leather and all the artificial leather covered insteps in the world will not hide the fact that Jack Johnson's feet are flat. They are worse than that.

JEFF IS PUTTING IN HARD LICKS WITH AX

Getting in Shape by Chopping and Sawing Wood—Corbett Gets ...

By H. M. Walker.

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 26.—Jim Jeffries put on a glum face today, when told of the threatened break between Promoters Gleason and Rickard.

"I am sorry that the boys can't get along better. San Francisco is a great fight city, and I would like to see my battle with Johnson pulled off there. I hope they get everything fixed up soon," was Jim's statement.

The Big Boy put in another busy day. He went for a long run on the hill in the morning, and in the afternoon went back to his favorite stunt of sawing wood.

"This is just the kind of work I need to harden me up," said Jeff. "I am more than satisfied with the way I am shaping into condition. The hill climbs and road work is putting my wind in good condition, and this wood chopping and wood sawing is exactly the kind of work I need at this early stage of the game."

The McCarey diamond belt, emblematic of the world's bantamweight championship, was formally turned over to Frankie Conley this afternoon. Conley and Danny Webster were practically matched tonight to meet in a ...-round bout for the bantamweight title. The April date for the Conley-Webster match was left open.

CHILD KILLS RATTLER

Raymond Harris, Aged 12 Years, Gets First Reptile of the Season. Early Spring?

A large rattlesnake, the first seen in this locality for some time, and very early for the season, probably attracted by the warm sun, was killed a few miles northwest of the city yesterday noon by Raymond Harris, a 12-year-old boy, of 1217 Monroe avenue. The rattler was dormant, and did not show fight. It had six rattles and a button. The appearance of the reptile so early in the year has caused some of the old-timers to prophecy early approaching spring.

WANTED TO USE GUN

A. J. Bishop Asks for Permission to Defend Bulldog, Which Is "Cranky."

Angered because some young men of the neighborhood had been tormenting his pet bulldog and throwing rocks at it, A. J. Bishop of 111 Lincoln avenue yesterday applied to Chief of Police Alex Taws for permission to carry weapons and to use them if his pet were not let alone. Chief Taws could not act, and told Bishop to "think a few times" before taking such rash action as he proposed. Bishop claims that his dog, although a little "cranky," never harmed anyone, and that he will not allow it to be beaten and struck with rocks. "I have five guns," said Bishop to Chief Taws, "and I want to carry one of them." The tormentors of the bulldog claim that they have been using rocks only in defense.

Orders for part of this advertising matter have been sent to the printer, and the first editions will be out this week. DEVELOPMENT OF REGION PROMISED

COLORADO CITY WILL BE BOOMING THIS SPRING.

Fine Tile Clay, Hot and Cold Mineral Waters, Etc, to Be Bought Soon

That the natural resources of this vicinity will be developed this spring and summer to get mineral waters, both hot and cold, for fancy clays for the manufacture of pottery and brickware, is the word which has been passed among the owners of property having such resources. For the last three weeks experts have been making a thorough examination of the property southwest and west of the city for clays, and in Black canon, for mineral waters. Reports from these experts pronounce the clays to be of the finest varieties, stating that they can be used in fine pottery, vitrified brick or in fancy tiling. C. W. Kinsman who owns a large tract of land west of the city, has had his clay tested at the State School of Mines laboratories, and finds that it is of the best grade.

The fact that several caves of hot air have been found on the Goetke property near Black canon and that the investigations have shown a possibility of hot sulphur water, has caused the owners of property in this region to discuss the matter of drilling. It is understood that a diamond drill has been engaged to bore on some of the land. Owners say that there is "something in the air" along these lines, and that by the first of April this section will be booming.

ELECTRIC SIGNS ADDED

Colorado City Merchants Putting Up Handsome Indications of Town's Prosperity.

That the work of the advertising committee of the chamber of commerce relative to the installation of more electric street signs for the city has been effective, is apparent from the number of orders for signs turned in during the last week. Seven large electric signs have been contracted for and will be put in place during the next 10 days. Among the firms who are to install the signs are: Simon Kranz, Borst market, McIntosh Drug company and the Colorado City Fuel and Ice company which has planned a very elaborate affair. Sherman and Sherman just installed their sign, and the committee states that 10 new signs for the next month are planned. It is hoped that the business section of Colorado avenue will be a mass of electric signs this summer.

HUNTING AND FISHING POPULAR PASTIMES

MILLIONS OF DEVOTEES OF THE ROAD AND THE GUN.

National Association of Audubon Societies Making Earnest Efforts to Conserve Game.

By Frederic J. Haskin.

The fourth fish and game exposition now being held in Chicago has brought together a most unique collection of outfits for fishermen and hunters. There never has been so many devotees of the rod and the gun as there are today, and manufacturers and dealers are reaping a harvest from it. A Massachusetts authority estimates that there are 30,000 hunters and fishermen in the Bay state, and if the same proportion obtains in other states the number of "mighty hunters before the Lord" in America must run into the millions.

The great problem confronting the American sportsmen today, with respect to fish and game, is how to "eat cake and have it." They realize that the pot-hunter is cutting down the supply below the danger limit. The quail and the pheasant are disappearing and in the effort of the sportsmen to restock the country with these game birds there has come a new industry—that of quail and pheasant raising. Young quail have been grown with only indifferent success, but pheasants are comparatively easy to rear. A Colorado corporation has been organized to raise and sell pheasants, and has been receiving orders from everywhere. Among the patrons of this corporation is President Diaz of Mexico.

The National Association of Audubon Societies of America is making earnest efforts to conserve the game of the country, and the protective laws that are on the statute books of nearly all the states are for the most part a result of its labors. It is now making an effort to have taken a bird census of the country, in order to get full details as to the destruction that has taken place, and the best methods of protecting the birds in the future. The association has issued a number of educational leaflets intended to interest school boys, one of which is entitled "The Aigrette Has Lost Castle." It includes a letter from ex-President Roosevelt [illegible] that Mrs. Roosevelt will not wear an aigrette, thus showing her disapproval of the slaughter [illegible] them.

Birds' Havens of Refuge.

Another work of the association is the purchase of islands off the coast of Florida and Louisiana, and their conversion into havens of refuge for the millions of shore birds which inhabit those regions. The year 1908 saw the extinction of one of the most beautiful species of North America has ever possessed, the white heron. Along with the great auk the white heron perished because of the love of woman for its beautiful plumage. It is said that over [illegible] robins are slaughtered annually in [illegible], and the department of agriculture thinks that [illegible] of the [illegible] to be [illegible] directly to the [illegible] of that [illegible] in the [illegible]. It has been estimated that the annual loss from insects in the United States [illegible] a half billion dollars, and that a large percentage of this [illegible] might have been saved by the protection of all insect-eating birds.

One of the greatest natural deer parks in the world is the Catahoula [illegible] of Louisiana. It was [illegible] this winter by a lot of hunters who put the deer for their [illegible]. More than five hundred [illegible] already have been found and this is known to be only a part of them. The people of the [illegible] are up in arms over this pot-hunter [illegible] and it probably will result in some [illegible] protective action by the [illegible] legislature. The other [illegible] of the [illegible] law [illegible] experience of the farmers in Shelby and adjoining counties in Iowa. Here the game laws have been enforced so rigidly that 400 deer are running at large and annoying the farmers by their depredations. The bucks in some instances have become so ferocious as to attack school children. This splendid herd of deer has grown from a few animals which escaped from a private park in Avoca, Ia., some ten years ago.

Out of the countless millions of American bison which roamed over this continent in the eighteenth century, less than 3,000 now remain as sombre sentinels of a dying species. A bison census taken by William T. Hornaday two years ago showed 1,141 in the United States, 830 in Canada and 130 in Europe. In addition to these there were 346 hybrids called cattaloes, a cross between buffalo and cattle. The last buffalo which is known to have associated with the great herds that roamed wild over the prairies of Canada, was Sir Donald, the veteran bull of the Banff herd. He was killed recently for museum purposes. This animal was captured in 1872 by James Mackay. All those which survive Sir Donald were born in captivity. In Alaska the caribou still roam wild, and herds containing 10,000 animals are frequently seen.

Deep Sea Fishing Record.

For deep sea fishing the whaler St. Lawrence broke the world's record last winter by capturing 318 whales in a single season. Of these 241 were humpbacks, 66 sulphur-bottoms, 10 fin-backs and one sperm whale. With all this great catch there was not a single serious accident. The modern whaler uses the latest twentieth-century methods in his work. He raises the dead whale to the surface with compressed air. An incision is made in the body and a connection established with the air-pump. When the carcass is sufficiently bouyant the incision is plugged up with oakum and a buoy with a flag is attached; the carcass is then turned adrift until the day's work is over, when the whole catch is towed to the whaling station. It has been said that in the great packing houses everything about a pig is saved but his squeal; at a modern whaling station everything is saved but the spout.

A western inventor has patented a steel trap for catching fish. It is very like the ordinary steel-jawed fox trap, except that the jaws are perpendicular instead of horizontal. A hook is baited and the trap let down into the water; the moment a fish touches the bait the jaws close and the victim is held secure. Another inventor has patented a trap which [illegible] the body of an animal as well as a leg. It consists of four upright pieces extending above the jaws of the trap.

When ex-President Roosevelt [illegible] to Berlin he will [illegible] [illegible]. [illegible] but his efforts have proved [illegible] big game of Africa. At [illegible] hunting lodge at [illegible] everything [illegible] the hunting [illegible] and the dogs are English fox hounds taken across the channel [illegible]. There are seventy hounds in the pack and [illegible] has watched over their training. He has two sets of hounds, one of which is [illegible] day while the other is being thoroughly cleaned and [illegible].

What the greyhound of this country is to the deer [illegible], the cheata is to the native [illegible] of Africa. It is [illegible] as the hunting [illegible]. The [illegible] will [illegible] with this is to [illegible] it and [illegible]. The young [illegible] he is [illegible] as a hunter. There are [illegible] to which the [illegible] to what their claws, and [illegible] of [illegible]. The leg of the [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] training [illegible]. Washington's Birthday Celebrations

BUFFET IN THE ANTLERS DINING ROOM.
Reception Zebulon Pike, D. A. R. for Colorado Springs S. A. R.

SCENE IN THE ANTLERS BALL ROOM.
During Children's Colonial Party.

PATRIOTIC celebrations, chiefly, engaged the attention of Colorado Springs society the past week and never were there more elaborate and beautiful functions than those described in today's issue of The Gazette. The largest among the many which took place were held at the Antlers hotel which lends itself so readily to the entertaining of guests.

The handsome reception of the Zebulon Pike chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution given Tuesday evening in compliment to the Colorado Springs chapter of the Sons of the American Revolution, and the families of each organization, was one of the finest patriotic social occasions ever witnessed in this city.

The Antlers hotel was thronged as the hour of 8 approached and the guests were received in the great drawing room by Mrs. Francis W. Goddard, regent of the Zebulon Pike chapter, D. A. R.; Dr. William W. Arnold, president of the Colorado Springs chapter, S. A. R., Mrs. W. H. R. Stote, state vice regent; Mrs. Franklin E. Brooks, past vice president general of the national society; Mrs. Edgar M. Marbourg, vice regent, Zebulon Pike chapter, D. A. R., and Mrs. Walter C. Frost, registrar, Zebulon Pike chapter, D. A. R.

"The Recessional" (Kipling) music by DeKoven, was beautifully rendered by Mrs. John Speed Tucker, with Miss Evelyn Lennox at the piano. Mrs. Tucker also sang the solo of "The Star Spangled Banner" with those present joining in the chorus. Mrs. Nelson L. Drew was accompanist.

As befitted the occasion no special attempt was made in decorating except to accentuate the national colors. Near the entrance to the drawing room upon a background of flags hung the insignia of the D. A. R. and the walls in the dining room were ornamented with flags. Red roses were in vases in the drawing room and great clusters of vari-colored carnations in the dining room.

An elegant buffet was spread in the dining room after an especial design that attracted great admiration. There was a replica of the Antlers made of white sugar and illuminated within by electricity, besides facsimilies of the historic Washington cherry tree and hatchet and other handsome designs symbolic of the season. The guests were served with lemonade, sandwiches, ice cream, cake and confections and all time Fink's orchestra played patriotic selections.

"Bal Poudre"

The spacious residence of Mr. and Mrs. Frank F. Costello, 632 North Nevada avenue, was the scene of a most realistic and beautiful "bal poudre" on the evening of Washington's birthday. The guests were received in the dainty white and gold drawing room by the host and hostess and their daughter, Miss Clara Castello. Nearly all those present were in colonial costume or at least had powdered hair and patches. The quaint satin petticoats under huge paniers and high crushed bodices were most becoming to the ladies, and the men, too, received their share of admiration in the Washingtonian knee breeches, gay waistcoats, lace ruffles and bright shoe buckles.

As colonial pages, Helen Louise and Frank Castello, Jr., resembled sweet little Dresden figures of the bygone century, as they welcomed the guests on the stairs.

The portraits of George and Martha Washington were given prominence in the large reception hall artistically draped with flags, and in the other appointments there were reminders of Colonial days.

Palms intermingled the roomy porches, which were inclosed and fitted up with oriental rugs and easy chairs and lights and gave ample space for promenades between the dances. Fink's orchestra furnished inspiring music for the dancing until 2 a. m., when a delicate supper was served at small tables. Afterwards, the Virginia reel and other olden time favorite were danced. In the dining room, where the buffet was spread, the colors were gold and white and the flowers used were great masses of daffodils.

Among those receiving invitations were:

Mr. and Mrs. Willis R. Armstrong, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Hawkins, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Hamlin, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Lowe, Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Newbold, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Children's Colonial Party.

The elaborate colonial party given by Mr. and Mrs. William S. Dunning, of the Antlers hotel, for more than 250 children of the city on Washington's birthday will long be recalled with pleasure, not only by the little participants, but the hundreds of fond parents and friends who were interested onlookers at the happy scene.

Nearly all the little guests were in colonial costumes and their naive unconcern and ease of manner was marvelous to see. Promptly at 3 o'clock the grand march began to the ball room where for an hour there was a splendid entertainment consisting of a "Punch and Judy" show, moving pictures and the exhibition of an "air ship." Meanwhile, Fink's orchestra played popular and patriotic airs. A toy balloon, a flag and a trumpet was distributed to each child and the joy of it all was shown in the hilarious shouts of pleasure. The second hour there was dancing and then the grand march began to the dining room where the children were seated at small tables and served with sandwiches, cocoa, ice cream and cake.

Arches of southern smilax studded with poinsettias and chrysanthemums and illuminated with tiny red, white and blue electric lights decorated the ball room. Upon the stage were portraits of George and Martha Washington on flag draped easels. There were large flags as a background, and the front [illegible]

In the entertainment of the children, Mr. and Mrs. Dunning were assisted by Mrs. William O. Brinker, Mrs. Lafon Brinker, Mrs. Samuel Sholom, Mrs. Berman Shoenfelt, Miss Vera Giannini and Miss Lucile Muhlberg, also, the parents of several of the children, who seemed to enjoy the party just as well as the children.

Colonial Ball.

The sophomore young women of Colorado College participated in their annual colonial ball last Monday evening in Bemis hall. The costuming was particularly unique and beautiful and the dancing thoroughly enjoyable. The minuet was danced with all the stately precision of Revolutionary times and with much grace and the same was true of the dances of the present day. The ball was preceded by a colonial supper.

Among those invited to the ball were President and Mrs. William F. Slocum, Mrs. Florian Cajori, Mrs. George M. Howe, Mrs. Homer C. Woodbridge, Mrs. Elijah C. Hill, Mrs. George Lyon, Mrs. J. M. Dennis, Mrs. Alfred A. Blackman, Miss Brown, Miss Barclay, Miss Sahm, Miss Sater and others.

Rothrock-Ewing Marriage.

The marriage of Miss Nancy Ewing and Dr. Francis B. Rothrock was beautifully celebrated Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, in the home of the bride's friends, Mr. and Mrs. Roswell P. Russell, 1901 North Nevada avenue. The Rev. James H. Franklin, pastor of the First Baptist church, officiated and in the absence of the bride's father, Mr. Joel Ewing of Memphis, Mo., who was unable to be present on account of illness, she was given away by Mr. Robert W. Chisholm. The witnesses were a few of the intimate friends of the bride and groom.

The bridal party was grouped before the mantel in the library, which was banked with palms and decorated with roses, lilies of the valley, hyacinths and carnations. The wedding march was played by Miss Lockstone and Mrs. Edward E. Taliaferro sang the exquisite solo, "Beloved It Is Morn."

The bride wore a handsome princess gown of white satin trimmed with chiffon and seed pearl ornaments and her full tulle veil was caught to the coiffure with sprays of lilies of the valley. She carried a bouquet of bride's roses showered with lilies of the valley and maidenhair ferns.

Following congratulations, refreshments were served in the dining room from a table decorated with pink roses and carnations mingled with smilax and ferns. There was a handsome bride's loaf, also a wedding fruit cake made by the groom's mother 13 years ago.

Dr. and Mrs. Rothrock left on the evening train for a month's stay in southern California. Upon their return they will be at home to their friends after April 1, at 1933 North Tejon street.

Both bride and groom are well and favorably known to a wide circle of friends. This was evidenced in the numerous and costly gifts which they received.

CONVINCING PROOF

OF THE VIRTUE OF

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

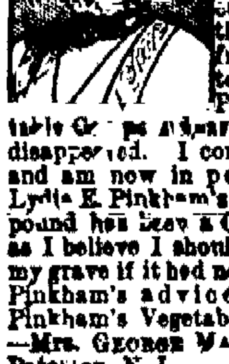

What is the use of procrastinating in the face of such evidence as the following letters represent? If you are a sick woman or know one who is, what sensible reason have you for not giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial? For 30 years we have been publishing such testimonial letters as these thousands of them—they are genuine and honest, too, every one of them.

Mrs. S. J. Barber says:

"I think Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the best medicine in the world for women and I feel it my duty to let others know the good it has done for me. Three years ago I had a tumor which the doctor said would have to be removed by an operation or I could not live more than a year, or two, at most. I wrote Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., for advice, and took 14 bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and today the tumor is gone and I am a perfectly well woman. I hope my testimonial will be of benefit to others."—Mrs. S. J. Barber, Scott, N. Y.

Mrs. George May says:

"No one knows what I have suffered from female troubles, neuralgia pains, and backache. My doctor said he could not give me anything to cure it. Through the advice of a friend I began to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the pains disappeared. I continued its use and am now in perfect health. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been a God-send to me as I believe I should have been in my grave if it had not been for Mrs. Pinkham's advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. George May, 86 4th Ave., Paterson, N.J.

Mrs. E. F. Hayes says:

"I was under the doctor's treatment for a fibroid tumor. I suffered with pain, soreness, bloating, and could not walk or stand on my feet any length of time. I wrote to Mrs. Pinkham for advice, followed her directions and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. To-day I am a well woman, the tumor was expelled and my whole system strengthened. I advise all women who are afflicted with tumors or female troubles to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. E. F. Hayes, 1890 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Mrs. W. K. Housh says:

"I have been completely cured of a severe female trouble by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and want to recommend it to all suffering women."—Mrs. W. K. Housh, 7 Eastview Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Because your case is a difficult one, and doctors having done you no good, do not continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It surely has cured many cases of female ills, such as inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, etc.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

Through the efforts of the "tens" $250 has been raised by memberships and contributions. The highest number of members secured was by Mrs. L. A. Giddings, who got 41 persons to join, and the next by Mrs. C. T. Fertig, who brought in 25. The total number of new members will aggregate more than 200.

Mrs. Sanford spoke appreciatively of the great work accomplished by Mrs. Riddle, who was president of the association for seven years, up to the time that her health necessitated her removal to California. Mrs. Baker, the secretary, gave an excellent résumé of the year's work. The treasurer, Mrs. Ensign, gave the following report.

Balance, February 23, 1909	$ 175.00
Receipts	1,277.40
Total	[illegible]
Disbursements	[illegible]
Balance, February 21, 1910	300.07
Balance in ... fund	13.04
Balance for Boys Sloyd	45.05
Total	$ 381.16

Mr. Maris, who was appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the death of R. G. Knowlton, former superintendent of the club, paid a warm tribute to the memory of his predecessor and attributed much of the success of the year's work to the very excellent conditions in which he found the affairs of the club.

Mr. Maris' report showed that two hundred and fifty-three boys have joined the club during the year. Of this number about two hundred are capable of doing work in the manual training department, about ... of which have already taken their turn in the shop. These boys have made from two to eight articles each, or about ... hundred pieces in all. The ... sale of articles made in this department amounted to over $50. The greatest need of the sloyd room is individual equipment and new benches of approved pattern, two of which are to be furnished at once by a friend of the club. Mr. Maris recommended that small metallic labels be placed on every piece of work made in the sloyd department, showing that the article so labeled had been made by the Boys club of Colorado Springs.

Owing to the lack of a gymnasium, about the only form of athletics engaged in by the club members is boxing and the good humor with which the lads give and take vigorous blows speaks well for their control of temper. However, there is a possibility of a wrestling mat being added to the equipment soon and then the youthful champions of Frank Gotch will have their innings.

The games are well patronized at all times, but not all the boys spend their time in working or playing as is shown by the record of the library which comprises about a thousand volumes of good literature. One hundred and eighty boys have taken out four hundred and sixteen books during the past five months. In addition to the library there is also a liberal supply of current magazines and many of the boys spend their evenings around the library table. After the magazines have served their purpose at the club the boys are permitted to take them home.

The club is controlled by a self-government system the officers of which are elected by the membership and are organized on much the same basis as the city government, there being a mayor, chief of police, fire chief, city physician and a council of six members. This system works well in the club and relieves the management of many of the petty annoyances incidental to the government of two hundred and fifty lively citizens of Boyville.

While an informal reception was held at the close of the business meeting, tea was served in the dining room. The centerpiece was of white carnations and ferns. Mrs. Sherwood Aldrich poured the tea, while Mrs. Louis A. Giddings poured the coffee, assisted by Mrs. William W. Williamson and Miss Holmes.

Health and Beauty Helps

BY MRS. MAY MARTYN.

Miss E. R.: A lotion that will help your red hands, dark face and neck permanently can be made by dissolving four ounces of spurmax in one-half pint of hot water and adding two teaspoonfuls of glycerine. This lotion will whiten and beautify your skin and take away that course, muddy look you have. This is much better than face powder, as it does not show on the skin, and will not rub off easily, like the powder does when you wear a veil. Spurmax lotion is inexpensive and will give any sallow, oily skin a pinkish, youthful appearance. It is fine for cold sores, tan, freckles and as a protection to the face against cold winds. I am sure you will like spurmax lotion very much.

Monday, "The Old Homestead"—This old-time favorite by Denman Thompson will come to the Opera House Monday evening for the first time in three years. According to the Denver papers the production has been kept up to a good standard and the cast is an adequate one.

Tuesday, "A Man's a Man"—Robert Edeson, who has not been seen in this city for several years, will present his latest effort, "A Man's a Man," at the Opera House Tuesday evening. The play is said to be the best Edeson has yet appeared in. The cast includes Josephine Lovett.

Saturday, "The Flower of the Ranch"—This Howard musical melodrama was first seen in Colorado Springs about a year ago. It returns only to fill the date originally booked for "Babes in Toyland," which attraction closed its tour in the west a few weeks ago.

Majestic Theater—Commencing Monday Matinee and all week. Sullivan and Considine Imperial Vaudeville. Herr Albert's Ten Polar Bears, the most sensational animal act in the world. Josephine Gassman and her clever Pickaninnies. Thelma DeVerne, the lady with a real baritone voice, and Harry G. Van, the musical comedian, presenting a comedy musical and singing sketch. Mons. Le Hirt, an expert hand and head balancer. Majestiscope, pictures with a heart throb. Majestic Concert Orchestra.

What the Press Agents Say

"THE OLD HOMESTEAD."

Denman Thompson's "The Old Homestead," unimpaired in every way and seemingly more virile and compelling than in the past, is now in its 24th season and is playing to audiences that completely fill the theaters where the company appears. The audiences follow the thread of the old story with as much unflagging interest as if it were all brand new. The production, in all the essential details that go to make up a play, is perfect. Such familiar scenes as the old farmyard in the New Hampshire hills breathe the air of good, wholesome honesty.

The equally familiar Grace church scene, with the choir singing the well known but always pleasing music, is said to be as good as in former seasons. One of the secrets of the longevity of this simple play of a simple people lies in the high standard always maintained in production and presenting company. Frank Thompson, Denman Thompson's son, who is manager, keeps the traditions of the old play well in hand and he consequently reaps a golden harvest every season.

The famous double quartette of farm hands is one of the distinct features of the play, and the old and new songs that are rendered always meet with the warmest and most appreciative approval. Edward Sandry is playing the part of Uncle Josh, and among the other old favorites may be mentioned Maggie Brever, Fred Clare, Charles Clarke, Earl Redding, George Patch, Dave Willard and Anita Fowler. "The Old Homestead" plays at the Opera house Monday evening.

ROBERT EDESON.

Local theater-goers will relish the announcement that popular Robert Edeson is soon to be seen in this city, coming to the Opera house on Tuesday evening for one performance, when he will be seen for the first time in his latest stellar vehicle, "A Man's a Man," a new play of American life of the present time, by Anna Strese Richardson and Henry Leslie Fridenberg, both of whom are newcomers to the ranks of native playwrights.

In this drama Mr. Edeson appears as a wealthy New York attorney of assured social position, who is retained by a western millionaire to corrupt the state legislature into the passage of a law that will enable the latter to satisfy social ambitions born of his sudden rise to wealth and power. The role is said to afford this young actor with one of the finest opportunities of his successful career. His local engagement will be the first reason that Mr. Edeson is surrounded by one of the most competent acting organizations of recent seasons, the cast of "A Man's a Man" including such well known players as Menifee Johnstone, Joseph Rawley, Howard Hall, Lawrence Windom, James Grady, Josephine Lovett, Blanche Weaver, Helen Macbeth, Maggie Halloway Fisher, Cordelia Macdonald, Eleanor Sheldon and Elsa Lorimer.

MLLE. LINA CAVALIERI, the noted soprano of the Manhattan Opera house, who is reported engaged to Robert Chanler, the millionaire grandson of John Jacob Astor. Mr. Chanler is an artist and in reply to questions put to him in New York recently for the particulars of the match simply grinned and declared it was a glorious love affair that should be proclaimed to the whole world. Mr. Chanler's friends say that Mlle. Cavalieri has not quite exactly made up her mind as to how soon she wants to get married, and that is all the hitch there is. She is considered a famous beauty.

"THE FLOWER OF THE RANCH."

Just a bit in advance of all other musical comedies is "The Flower of the Ranch," Joseph E. Howard's most successful comedy which comes to the Opera house Saturday evening. This particular play not only possesses Mr. Howard's best music, but its plot is worked out as strongly as any of our best dramatic attractions. Mr. Howard wrote this play expressly for himself and Miss Barrington, and its success has equaled anything that has been produced in the light opera in recent years, remaining four months in three different theaters in New York and 20 nights in Chicago. The scenes are laid in the mountainous section of California, picturing typical ranch life in the golden hills.

Flower is a girl just blossoming into womanhood, who came to the ranch of Judge Hopper almost by a miracle 16 years before the play opens. A stage coach conveying passengers through the mountains has tumbled over a precipice, and Judge Hopper with a party of ranchmen, went to the rescue. There he found a baby in its dead mother's arms. He brought it to his cabin and this baby grew to be the flower of the ranch.

Miss Nellie Watters is the California bud. She is a winsome little miss, who can sing and dance, and to her falls a goodly share of the musical numbers. Margaret, the school-marm, is portrayed by Miss Adalaine O'Brien, who possesses a rich soprano voice. John E. Frank, as Jack Farnum, a young ranchman, who finally wins the hand of Flower, is the possessor of a clear tenor voice of wide range. Jack Harris, as "Skivers," a tenderfoot light comedy character, keeps the audience in continuous laughter with his nimble wit and clever dancing. A sprightly chorus of real singers and dancers goes to make up a real organization.

UNEQUALED ATTRACTIONS BOOKED BY MAJESTIC

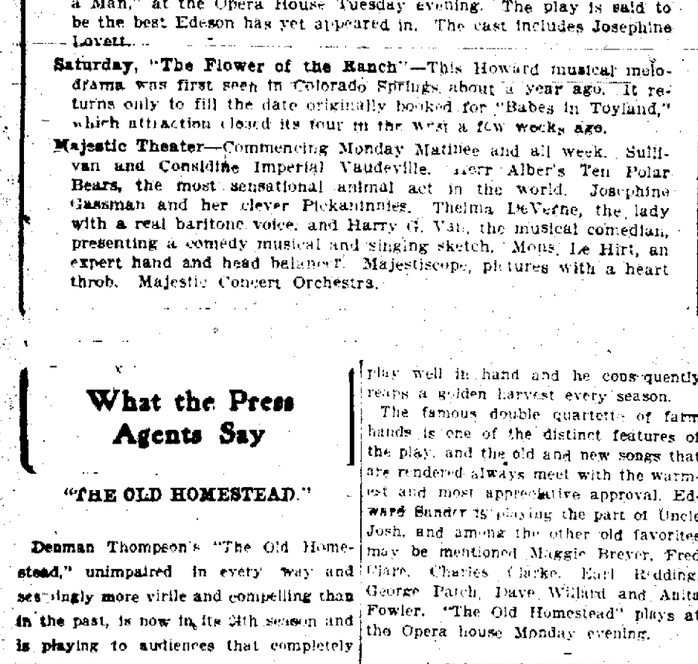

With two of the most famous vaudeville acts in the world on the program for the coming week, together with two other acts that maintain the high standard of the Sullivan and Considine circuit, an interesting series of motion pictures on the Majestiscope canvas and the concert orchestra program, the Majestic's new show, opening with Monday's matinee, is undoubtedly the greatest vaudeville attraction that ever played to a Colorado Springs audience.

The leading act—known all over Europe and the eastern cities of this country, but now playing the west for the first time—is that of Herr Albers and his 10 trained polar bears, and everywhere it appears it is the sensation of the hour. These huge beasts, in their native state as fierce as any animal that walks on all fours, tumble with Herr Albers and although the latter is as big and powerful as Frank Gotch, the bear puts him on his back and holds him down.

Herr Albers walks among these great beasts as if they were no more dangerous than kittens, but he is ever watchful and besides being dressed so as to protect himself, carries a revolver, a prod and a big whip, which he uses to subdue the animals when, as often happens, they get to fighting or fail to obey his orders. His control over them is wonderful, but every time he gives his act he takes his life in his hands and for this reason the spectators have their hearts in their throats.

Second only to this number is the celebrated act of Josephine Gassman, one of the best-known women in vaudeville, who is touring the west for the first time with her three pickaninnies in the singing, dancing and comedy act which eastern audiences have raved over and western ones have sighed to see. This act is one of the most popular ever seen in this part of the country and is bound to make a huge hit.

As if these two great attractions were not enough to satisfy the most exacting, Manager Thompson has also booked Mons. Le Hirt, the noted Parisian head and hand balancer, who has a sensational gymnastic act, and Thelma De Verne and Harry G. Van, two well known comedians, who have an original singing specialty. The concert orchestra program and Majestiscope motion pictures round out a bill that equals if it does not eclipse the greatest of any of the great shows that have made the Majestic famous.

New York Theatrical Letter

1.—JULIA MARLOWE, as "Katherine," in Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew," at the Academy of Music.
2.—MRS. PATRICK CAMPBELL, Who is Now Appearing as a "Headliner" in Vaudeville.
3.—MISS BERTHA KALICH, Who Starred in "The Witch" at the New.

It is safe to say that the audiences who have seen "The Witch," the latest production at the New theater, have come away from that artistic establishment with anything but a pleasant impression of our pious New England ancestors, who left their native land and established homes on the shore of New England. For, aside from an exquisite stage setting showing a New England landscape in autumn, and a bibulous town clerk, who died all too soon, there isn't a bright spot in the play. Everyone is gloomy. The proverbial long faces of our Puritan forefathers were carried around during the entire performance, and seldom did any of the principals open his or her mouth unless it was to spout some biblical quotation and play on the superstitious fears of the neighbors. The only good effect the play may have is that it may cause some dissatisfied person to cease grumbling—and thank fortune that they are living in the twentieth century, even if the cost of living is high.

"The Witch" is of foreign origin, having been written by H. Janssen, the famous Norwegian dramatist. Prof. Hermann Hagedorn, of Harvard, transplanted the tragedy from its Scandanavian surroundings into the atmosphere of New England, owing to the similarity of conditions which existed in this country in the latter part of the seventeenth century.

The scene is laid in the town of Salem, in the year 1691, and the story has for its central figure Joan Hawthorne, wife of Absalom Hawthorne, an aged minister.

Joan is a Portuguese by birth, and her mother had been a witch. This fact, however, is not publicly known, as the minister has kept the matter a secret, owing to his love for the daughter. The play opens with the good people of Salem hunting down a witch in order to put her to death in accordance with the custom. The poor creature seeks out Joan and asks for protection, but the girl turns her over to her pursuers. Mad with rage, she tells Joan that her mother was also in league with the evil one, as she is dragged away to the gallows.

The minister's son by his first wife returns from an ocean voyage and Joan falls madly in love with him.

Goodwife Abigail Hawthorne, Joan's mother-in-law, suspects the relations existing between Joan and her grandson, and she informs her son. When Absalom learns this, he reveals the secret of Joan's mother, and straightway the young wife realizes that she, too, is possessed of this strange power of evil. She expresses a desire for her lover and he, by a strange coincidence, makes his appearance. This strengthens her belief in her power.

In the last act she tells her husband that she no longer loves him, and wishes that he were dead. The old man, obligingly drops off, and the mother, Abigail Hawthorne, then informs the people of Salem that her daughter-in-law is a witch. Joan is placed on trial and is called upon to deny her guilt by placing her hand on her dead husband's forehead. She makes the attempt, but breaks down and, in a mumbling voice confesses her evil power. Then the curtain falls, leaving the inference that Joan is to be the next victim on Witch's Hill.

The play was the occasion for Miss Bertha Kalich's first appearance as a member of the New Theater Stock company, but it did not furnish a good line on her ability. The role of Joan was an unpleasant one, but Miss Kalich even failed to make the best of a few redeeming excerpts.

Miss Thais Lawton played the role of Abigail Hawthorne in a very effective manner. Guy Bates Post was an unsatisfactory young lover, and Ben Johnson played the role of the aged minister, his work being a little better, but lacking distinction. William McVay was the bibulous town clerk, and he gave the best performance. He died all too soon from the effects of over-indulgence.

"The Witch" may be artistic, but it is not attractive.

Vaudeville has its attractions, peronistry at least, which no doubt accounts for the large number of actors and actresses abandoning the "legitimate" for the "twice-a-day, 25minute stunt." The latest star to fall a victim to vaudeville's yellow lure is Mrs. Patrick Campbell, who is fairly launched in her new enterprise, but in an exceedingly leaky craft called "Expiation." It is a 25minute sketch by Henry Hamilton, with an ordinary Russian melodramatic plot, and worse acting.

True, Mrs. Pat is making a hit, but this may be largely due to the charming decolletee gown in which she appears, and the neat little speech she makes after numerous curtain calls. As to her personal popularity, there is no doubt and this in itself may furnish a long life for "Expiation," even though it does not deserve it.

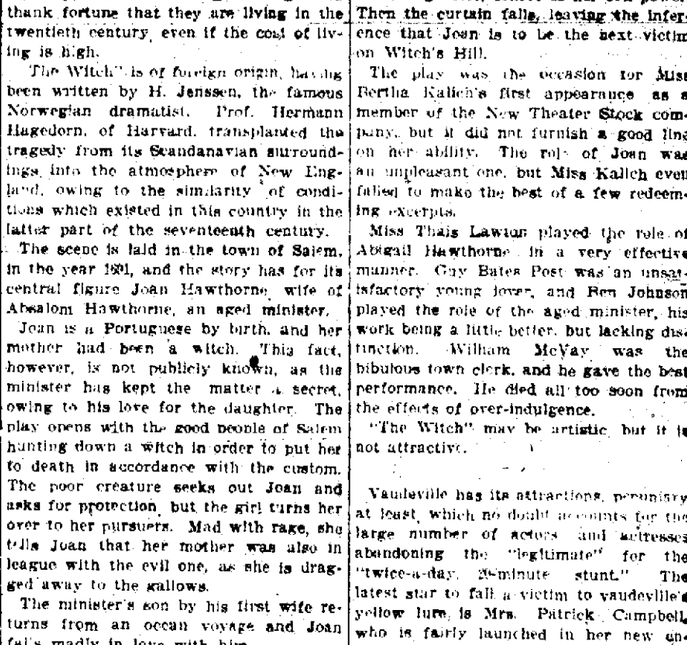

The little sketch deals with the tragic life of Sonja, a beautiful woman, who is very much beloved by Vassilivitch, the cruel governor of Petrovolsk, who passes his time pleasantly by torturing and kill-

BLANCHE WALSH.

"The Test," which will be seen at the Opera house in the near future, is the work of Jules Eckert Goodman. It is declared by critics to be the strongest drama produced in America in many years. In this play Miss Blanche Walsh has found a vehicle particularly suited to her dramatic talents. She considers it to be of greater dramatic value than any production in which she has ever appeared. Miss Walsh has spared neither pains nor expense in getting together one of the best casts that possibly could be employed.

Miss Eleanor Robson, the well-known actress who has just closed her theatrical season and will remain quietly in New York until her marriage to August Belmont, the millionaire banker, horse racer and society man. Simultaneously with Miss Robson's retirement, her mother, also known on the stage as a star of great talent under the name of Madge Carr, will also retire, and it is expected will live with her daughter.

"The Health Habit"

By ELBERT HUBBARD

I am the most original gazabo who ever came down the Cosmic Pike—and admit it.

I am an intent grabbermer, from Grabville, Grab County—watch for the divine electric spark and seize it, transmuting it into words. I take a feeling, and make of it a thought.

Always and forever I am on the lookout for ideas, thoughts, jokes, plans, schemes, not to mention lofty aspirations and divine impulses.

But I do not want the good for myself—I help myself only as I pass ideas along. I keep things by giving them away. All I desire for myself are two Stein-Bloch suits a year, and just enough mazuma to cover expenses.

And these things I have thus far managed to secure. I have never had a fire; never owed a dollar I could not pay; never been sick a day, or missed a meal, save through inability of access, or because I purposedly cut it out.

I never had a trouble, or trial or hardship which I did not afterwards discover was a blessing traveling incog.

Withal, I am very modest, but my modesty is modified by my desire to tap hidden reservoirs of truth, and irrigate the waste places of human lives—including my own.

Therefore, I do not apologize for being on earth, nor make excuses for drawing my breath or my pay. I do not skulk around to find myself a dishonorable grave. No, I am not preparing to die. I am preparing to live. And the best preparation for living is to live. If there is a life to come, surely there is no better preparation for it than living here and now right up to the highest and best, using all the intellect we possess and enjoying life to its fullest.

"The sick man is a rascal," said Dr. Johnson. That is, he is a quasi-criminal—one who has slipped his trolley and is out of touch with the currents of the universe.

Our metaphysical friends tell us that it is all a matter of mind, and if we have love in our hearts, thinking kindly of everybody, we will be well. The real fact is that people who are poisoned with malnutrition cannot think well of themselves or anybody. The ability to love as well as the ability to endure, depends upon the state of the digestion.

Most of our ills come from overeating, and to overeat is much more common than to overdrink. We have seen White Ribbon clubs organized all over the world to stop the sale of strong drink, but few people there be who are inclined to block and banish disease that travels by the Gorge Route.

The late, Diogenes was once prowling around with a lantern, looking for a Roycrofter, when he met a young man in gay attire. The philosopher stopped him and asked, Whither? The youth replied that he was going to a ——.

Thereupon Diogenes straightway collared him, and taking him to his home, ordered his parents to lock him up until his sanity returned.

Diogenes, he of the Simple Life, may have been a trifle eccentric, but he knew that the midnight supper spelled disease, disintegration and death.

Habit is second nature: that is to say, if you accustom yourself to a certain line of conduct you will be compelled to continue it though it kills you. The mental attitude of most people is is the result of bad habits acquired in youth. Bad habits cling with a persistence fully as strong as the good ones. For instance, the cigarette or the strong-drink habit. The coffee, meat and pancake breakfast is a habit with most people, and it is also a necessity, for what you grow to consider a necessity, is. People who have heartburn, bad breath, colds, pain in the side, headache, are all our meat-breakfast friends—there are no exceptions. All of these pleasant symptoms just named are the results of food poisoning. The person has stowed his hold with such a finely assorted cargo of indigestibles that nature pauses perplexed. Fermentation follows, and the individual is but an animated garbage can.

As a people, we are 25 per cent sick, through eating 25 per cent more food than our digestive apparatus can care for.

The no-breakfast plan has the disadvantage of being revolutionary—contrary to our fixed habit—you are aware of missing something, and a strong effort of the will is required to cut it out. This inward struggle uses up good energy. Often the best way is to succumb to it. Our no-breakfast friends usually explain the fact to all who will lend an ear—they are always aware they have had no breakfast. Forget it they cannot.

Good health does not demand that we deprive ourselves of all that appetite craves—simply be moderate. To limit breakfast to fruit, toast and one cup of coffee, is not difficult, and soon becomes delightful to most people. And the result of brain workers, who have been addicted to the meat-breakfast habit, will at once be left in a great sense of ease and clearness of mind. The simple cereal and cream habit, means increased length of days. To force your boiler is to have it filled with slag, making the boiler doctor necessary. And occasionally you are told to shut down and have a flue or two removed in order to prevent collapse.

An enlightened people who prize health should make it a rule to eat at least one meal a day without meat, and two may be better.

If we could acquire the habit of health through temperate living, the century would be the rule and not a rare exception. As it is, most men die at a time when they are just becoming fitted to live.

Having tried a lot of things and found them faulty, we begin to get wise when Death with his scythe comes over the hill.

John Burroughs describes old age as a letting go—a gradual lessening of interest in things which you once thought were vital. And with this letting go should come, and usually does, a glad relief. The fear of poverty, the dread of loss, apprehension concerning social position, the desire for approbation—all these slip away in the person of a well-ordered mind as the years advance. The desire to kill things dies; and all the great living, pulsing world or nature seems a little closer, nearer, nearer, more beautiful. And then, for the first time, we realize that nothing more matters after all.

The present is the time to enjoy. The individual is cosmopolitan—people interest more than persons.

But this fine life of the intellect can only go with a temperate life, of moderation.

Let us look to ourselves for health, not to the doctors. People who are forever taking note of their sensations and who send for a doctor if they feel bad, instead of figuring out in their own minds why they feel bad and avoiding the cause, are candidates for the ether cone. Those who are given to the luxuries of the table are preparing for the pleasures of the operator's table.

The average length of life would be increased immensely if we would just begin to "Know Thyself." As it is now, we depend on the doctors to cure us if we are sick, and if worst comes to worst, we are fully prepared to go to the hospital and have the surgeon remove the inflamed organ. Wouldn't it be better to so live that no inflammation would follow?

Disease comes only to those who have been preparing for it. Disease is a sequence postponed by Nature as long as she can, and then, discouraged, she says: "Let 'er go—back to the Mass!"

Beginners on the bicycle run into the object they seek to avoid. The doctor and the hospital are in our minds, we think disease, not happiness and health. Health is within our reach—it costs nothing—only the effort, which soon grows into a pleasurable habit. Ask the doctor of any school if I am not right. Why not acquire the Health Habit?

Here is the formula:

First—Deep breathing in the open air with your mouth closed.

Second—Moderation in eating simple dishes—Fletcherize.

Third—Exercise at least an hour in the open each day, walking, working in the garden, playing with the children.

Fourth—Sleep eight hours in a thoroughly ventilated room.

Fifth—Drink all the water between meals you care to.

Sixth—Don't bother to forgive your enemies—just forget them.

Seventh—Keep busy—it is a beautiful world, and we must and will and can leave it more beautiful than we found it.

ing Nihilists. Little does he suspect that his lovely "Bird of Paradise," as he calls her, is the wife of a revolutionist, but she is just the same, which all goes to show how easy some Russians are.

Before Sonja's entrance a suspect is captured in the garden, and is brought into the governor's room, in the center of which is a pillar, which plays a very important part. The poor fellow is chained to the pillar, and when he refuses to divulge the names of his fellow conspirators, he is tortured and then sent to his death. Then the lovely Bird of Paradise comes in, and after a few moments of coquetry with the bureaucrat, is horrified to learn that the man he put to death is her husband. In a playful manner she asks him to chain her to the pillar, in order that she may know how it feels to be a culprit, and after he has complied with her request and released her, she begs him to allow himself to be chained. This he does reluctantly, and foolishly, as you will find out. For, no sooner is he fastened than she picks up a handy revolver and, after revealing her identity, shoots him dead.

It is all very dramatic, and furnishes a few thrilling moments, but the foolish and inconsistent way in which the incidents are dovetailed make it ridiculous.

Mrs. Pat, of course, was the lovely Sonja, and Mr. Martindel played the role of the governor. A revolutionist and a secretary completed the cast.

It is a long journey from the exclusive and aristocratic surroundings of the New theater to the cosmopolitan atmosphere of the Academy of Music, on Fourteenth street—at least from an artistic viewpoint—but Julia Marlowe made the trip without inconvenience or detriment to her histrionic ability. Indeed, her Shakespearian productions at the ancient playhouse seem to be more generally appreciated than was the much-heralded production of Antony and Cleopatra, which opened the New theater, and in which Miss Marlowe starred.

The Claims of Manual Training: Its Value in School and Afterward

BY V. E. VOWTON,
Teacher of Manual Training, Colorado Springs Public Schools

In this discussion, space will permit the mere naming of a few of many facts, each of which is worthy a much longer consideration.

The effect of manual training long antedates its introduction into the school. From the most primitive times to the time of Watt, Whitney and Morse, we see at the fireside, in the field and in the shop the expression of a united effort toward that skill in useful things which constitutes the very essence of civilization. The invention and use of tools makes the difference and make the contrast between the savage and civilized man. As the savage increases his stock of tools, he recedes from the state of savagery. Someone said, "The great gulf between the aboriginal savage and civilized man is spanned by the seven hand tools, the ax the saw, the plane, the hammer, the square, the chisel and the file. These are the universal tools of the arts, and the modern machineshop is an aggregation of them rendered automatic and driven by steam." The tools a people possess are indicative of their civilization.

Phenomenal as is the influence of tools upon man, yet it is within our own time that education has become broad and rational enough to encompass tool instruction. This, though marvelous the advance in every line and upon every hand, is the greatest forward movement of the day.

The harshest criticism upon "civilized" education has been that it was not practical; that it did not prepare the individual for life, for earning a living, for getting on in the world, that there was such a breach between the home, the every day practical life and the life of the school that the one was of little value to the other and the other to the one; that the individual, even though collegiately educated, stood helpless and at sea when thrust upon his own resources. He had, as it were, to begin life over, to adjust and readjust himself to his environment. His education had had no relation to any business or vocation in which he might engage to earn the physical necessities of his body.

While we would not minimize the value of ethical culture nor eliminate entirely, the study of dead languages, nor banish the beautiful things of literature, nor efface the pages of history, yet we do believe that the school should, in a very large measure, be a continuation and an enlargement of the home and everyday life; that it should be practical and helpful; that the eight, 12 and 16 years spent in school should give the individual power to grapple life's problems, to earn life's necessities. On leaving the school he should not find himself a stranger to his environment.

We may well learn a lesson from primitive man. For example, the Indian boy was taught the use of the bow and arrow, the arts of the chase, warfare. In other words, he was schooled in his life pursuits, pursuits essential to self-preservation. Requisites should always have the priority over luxuries or nonessentials. Hence I take it that the first function of the public school is to arm the individual for the inevitable struggle for existence. To eat, drink and be comfortably clothed and housed, we grant, are not all the desiderata of living yet these are essentials and take precedence over all other considerations. The bread and butter problem is the consuming problem for the great majority and until it is solved the individual has little time for the things that do not contribute directly to these specific wants, however beautiful and grand they may be.

If we accept the long accepted theory that the perpetuity of a government like ours depends upon the education of its subjects we need not argue long to justify state demand and support of manual training. We accept the theory. And we hold that education is education truly, only when it gives power of accomplishment. Further we maintain that the only training that gives power of accomplishment is the dual training of mind and hand. Hence, toward manual culture the state can take no other than an affirmative position.

From Economic Point.

From an economic consideration the state must acknowledge the merit of manual training. What is more essential in the development of our abundant resources than skilled labor? Of the many common interests between capital and labor about the only admitted one is the need of skilled workmen.

Manual training will not at once greatly relieve the situation, for a manual training school is not a trade school. The one is preparatory to the other, but in that it is the first great step toward the ultimate solution of the trade's problem and the problem of foreign commercial competition. Is all this sufficient reason for state approbation and aid in this modern educational movement? If not, let us go further. In laying the foundation of education in labor, labor is dignified and education ennobled. Hence, manual training will tend to break down caste and level society. It will largely reduce the necessity of charity the most repulsive, nauseating, unamerican institution we have. Why should you, or I, or any other man be compelled to accept alms. Better far that our system make it possible for every man to be self-supporting and independent. About 95 per cent of the criminal confines of this country are without trades. If we are to have compulsory education—and I grant we should—then why not give a practical one, one that will help, that will give the individual power, and not set him adrift, leaving him to charity's mercy until he has learned, in the universal school of experience, an entirely new and different education? Why may not the coerced student demand that he be given instruction that will help him in his daily life out of school, the business of labor from which his physical wants must be supplied? Save in law, the ministry or medicine the products of the old school were more incompetent of self-support than the farmer boy who never saw inside a school house. In other words, it made no producers. We would not abolish the old, or cut loose from our anchorage to the past, but we would modernize and vitalize the old with the new. We would wed memory and theory to doing. In its last analysis, education is not education if it does not give ability to do. One of my college professors once said to a class in which I was: "A man is not educated if he can not hitch up a horse." The meaning of this homely statement is at once potent. The old baldheaded man did not mean that the ability to hitch up a horse constitutes an education, but rather that a man should know and be able to do the ordinary things of everyday life.

But, someone may question: "Is not our curriculum already overcrowded?" My answer is yes, and that a knowledge of pruning would be quite as advantageous to the pedagogue as to the horticulturist. But we must learn distinction between fundamentals and nonessentials, between things desired and things required. The thing of less value must give place to the thing of more value.

Again the question, "Can the student spare the time from the so-called cultural subjects?" Not to argue the question, let us hope that at least no teacher today is so far behind the times as to think that a manual training subject has less cultural value than any of the old standbys.

The Boy's View.

In a cursory way, let us consider the subject a little more specifically from the viewpoint of the boy. In a word, it will give him more training in order, method, neatness, accuracy, observation confidence and self-initiative than any other subject in the curriculum. Order, method and neatness have long been deemed worthy attainments, and their inculcation considered a function of the public school. In manual training these things are demanded, and the boy learns their necessity and attests their value in the immediate results of his own labor. In the same practical way he learns the difference between precision and approximation, a thing never learned in the old school. As for the development of self-reliance and initiative, there is no other subject with which it can be compared. Drawing in the school is a modern innovation. We believe it has a cultural and ethical value to warrant its place. But its value when given in the ordinary abstract way is incomparable to its value when given in its proper relation and application to the useful arts.

Again, boys like activity, and their symmetrical development demands it. They like life, real, active, business life. They throng the places where their big brothers, fathers and other men are doing things. Manual training will impart life to the school, give it a business air, and will hold many a boy who otherwise would leave the school to gratify his desire to do something, to make something, to be active.

To the boy, manual training has an economic value of no mean importance. He is enabled to make many beautiful and useful things for the home. He can save the expense of many repairs and minor additions to the home property. In so doing he maintains or enhances its value. Is it worth while to be thus useful and independent? When work is dull in his own line he is enabled to turn his hand to some other. Is this worth while? If he wishes to be a tradesman it is practically his only way to prepare for it, for, as is well known, since the growth of unionism the day of apprenticeship has almost lapsed into history. Manual training is to the trade what the college course is to specialization. It is basal and fundamental.

The question that every boy must answer—and indeed a difficult one—is the question of his calling or vocation. Many a life is almost spent, and seemingly wasted, in experiment before it finds its place, its forte, the one thing it can do best. The manual training school will help many boys to decide early and rightly this vital question, to choose the vocation in which they may excel and out of which get the most pleasure. The world is full of misfits. As manual training schools multiply the proportion of misfits in the world will diminish.

In conclusion, let us test our arguments by the findings of psychology. While we believe our contentions thus far maintained would in general be accepted by leading psychologists, yet we doubt not but that they would class them as secondary, holding that the primary or fundamental reasons for the existence of manual training are found in the subject named. They will tell us that the useful, well-constructed and beautifully-finished piece of furniture is not the product sought, but rather, the rounded, symmetrical, evenly-balanced boy. They have learned to appreciate the existing relation between the mind and hand; to recognize their alliance, their dependence, the one upon the other in their development. Hence the change from subjective to objective education, from the memory and cram process to the motor. A theory of education that does not expound the philosophy of "motorization" is out of date. The modern psychologist justifies this digression from the old beaten paths over which, for centuries, educators have trod purely from the cultural and ethical points of view. With him utility and practicability do not enter into the question.

Since the institution is justified both by the rationalist and the theorist, we need hesitate no longer, but should accept the inevitable, install manual training in all our schools, and keep abreast with the great onward march of progress that is now so manifest in every line and upon every hand.

S.S.S. CURES BLOOD POISON

The only way to cure Contagious Blood Poison is to REMOVE its cause. Trying to kill the germs within the system, or counteract disease cells in the blood with powerful mineral medicines, not only results in failure, but also weakens the more delicate and vital tissues, and allows the original trouble to attack other portions of the body.

It is solely on the principle of removing the cause by purifying the blood, that S. S. S. cures Contagious Blood Poison, and it does this because it is the most perfect and thorough of all blood remedies. It does not work on the principle of killing one poison by taking another, or trying to dry up the germs in the blood, but it cleanses the circulation and REMOVES the last vestige of the contagious infection.

Contagious Blood Poison is the most insidious of all diseases. It begins in an insignificant manner, usually the appearance of a tiny pimple or sore being the only outward evidence of its presence. But down in the blood the treacherous infection is at work, and in a short time the victim finds his body is affected from head to foot. The mouth and throat ulcerate, skin eruptions break out, sores and ulcers appear on the body, yellow splotches disfigure the skin, the glands in the groin and neck swell, and as the poison becomes more thoroughly saturated into the blood the hair and eyebrows come out.

Contagious Blood Poison is too dangerous to trifle with. Medicines which merely check the progress of the poison for a time and leave the insidious germs smouldering in the blood, have brought misery and disappointment to thousands. Faithfully they took such treatment for months, perhaps years, only to find when it was left off that the vicious disease was ready to crop out again in all its former destructiveness.

COVERED WITH SORES.

I was afflicted with a terrible blood [illegible] which was in post at [illegible], but [illegible] spread all over my body. The sores broke out into [illegible] and it is [illegible] the [illegible]. I [illegible]. If [illegible] I [illegible] S.S.S. [illegible] I was [illegible] and [illegible] with the [illegible]. The large red [illegible] on my [illegible] to [illegible] and [illegible]. I regained my lost [illegible] my appetite [illegible] of glass.
H. L. MEYERS.
[illegible]

The only possible way to cure Contagious Blood Poison is to remove the cause. This is just what S. S. S. does; and it is the one medicine that absolutely and thoroughly cleanses the blood of every trace of germs and virus of the disease. S. S. S. goes into the circulation, and while removing the cause makes the blood pure, fresh and healthy. This causes a general upbuilding of the entire system, and when S. S. S. has made a cure the patient experiences a change to vigorous, robust health.

S. S. S. is made entirely of roots, herbs and barks. It does not contain the slightest particle of Mercury, Potash or any other mineral substance to upset the stomach, and the bowels, or inflame any of the delicate membranes of the body. On the other hand, it is a fine tonic, made of botanical ingredients that aid the system in every way to overcome the effects of Contagious Blood Poison. We have a book on Home Treatment which we will send, together with any medical advice free to all. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

President Taft said: "Christian missions are indispensable to the political and civil progress of the world."

Ex-President Roosevelt said: "The change of sentiment in favor of the Foreign Missionary in a single generation has been remarkable."

GOOD, HONEST, SQUARE-DEAL

Medicines like those of Dr. R. V. Pierce of Buffalo, warrant their makers in printing their every ingredient, which they do, upon their outside wrappers, verifying the correctness of the same under oath. This open publicity places these medicines in a class all by themselves. Furthermore, it warrants physicians in prescribing them largely as they do in their worst cases.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

Is a most potent alterative or blood purifier, and tonic or invigorator and acts especially [illegible] in a curative way upon all the mucous lining surfaces, as of the nasal passages, throat, bronchial tubes, stomach and bowels, curing a large per cent. of catarrhal cases whether the disease affects the nasal passages, the throat, larynx, bronchia, stomach (as catarrhal dyspepsia), bowels (as mucous diarrhea), or other organs

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Is advised for the cure of one class of diseases only—those peculiar weaknesses, derangements and irregularities peculiar to women. It is a powerful yet gently acting invigorating tonic and nervine.

For weak, worn-out, over-worked women—no matter what has caused the break-down, "Favorite Prescription" will be found most effective in building up the strength, regulating the womanly functions, [illegible] and bringing about a healthy, vigorous condition of the whole system.

A book of particulars wraps each bottle giving the formula of both medicines and quoting [illegible] of [illegible] medical authors, whose works are consulted by physicians of all the schools of practice as guides in prescribing, [illegible] ingredient entering into these medicines.

Both medicines are non-alcoholic, non secret, and contain no harmful habit-forming drugs, being composed of glyceric extracts of the roots of native, American, medicinal, forest plants. They are both sold by dealers in medicine. You can't afford to accept as a substitute for one of these medicines of known composition, any secret nostrum. Don't do it.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets Cure Stomach Trouble

A Trial Package Sent Free

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are made to give to the system, through the digestive tract and the stomach, the necessary chemicals not only to digest food, but to enrich the fluids of the body so that it may no longer suffer from dyspepsia or other stomach trouble.

We will send you a quantity of these tablets free, so that their power to cure may be proven to you.

Thousands upon thousands of people are using these tablets for the aid and cure of every known stomach disease. Know what you put into your stomach, and use discretion in doing so.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets contain fruit and vegetable essences, the pure concentrated tincture of Hydrastis, Goden Seal, which tone up and strengthen the mucous lining of the stomach, and increase the flow of gastric and other digestive juices; Lactose (extracted from milk), Nux, to strengthen the nerves controlling the action of the stomach and to cure nervous dyspepsia, pure aseptic Pepsin of the highest digestive power and approved by the United States Phama-copoeia.

One of the ablest professors of the University of Michigan recently stated that this Pepsin was the only aseptic pepsin he had found that was absolutely pure free from all animal impurities, Bismuth, to absorb gases and prevent fermentation. They are deliciously flavored with concentrated Jamaica Ginger—in itself a well known stomach tonic.

Liquid medicines lose their strength the longer they are kept, through evaporation, fermentation and chemical changes, hence Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are recognized as the only true and logical manner of preserving the ingredients given above in their fullest strength.

If you really doubt the power of these tablets, take this advertisement to a druggist and ask his opinion of the formula.

It is due your stomach to give it the ingredients necessary to stop its trouble. It costs nothing to try. You know what you are taking and the fame of these tablets prove their value. All druggists sell them. Price 50 cents. Send us your name and address and we will send you a trial package by mail free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Building, Marshall, Mich.

Meat Prices Too High? — Well, Why Not Eat Fish?

WOMEN FISHING IN IDAHO TROUT STREAM

By ROBERTUS LOVE.

QUOTH the innocent and ingenuous Marie Antoinette, "Well, why don't they eat cake?" when the French queen was told that the people could not get bread. So today, when the people are boycotting meat because of the high prices, we arise to inquire, "Well, why don't they eat fish?"

The difference between the application of our query and that of Marie Antoinette is obvious. Cake costs more than bread, but fish costs less than meat. However, there is not at all times a sufficient supply of fish to feed the multitude, so the present writer is not going to preach a Lenten sermon, but proposes merely to set down some facts about fish, fishing and fish eating which, for the double reason that Lent is on and that the meat boycott is on, appear most timely.

Fish, some alienists tell us, is a brain food. Can it be that the meat boycott will result in a brainier race here in America? That possibility, at any rate, is one optimistic feature of a pessimistic situation. From ancient times fish has been accepted as a wholesome food. Christ multiplied the loaves and fishes, partaking thereof himself. Today, as in the past, those who observe the religious attitude as to diet eat little flesh food other than fish during Lent. Fish is regarded as a purifying food, but it must be pure fish, fresh, not stale, to perform this healthful physical function.

The Creator has planted the seas and the lakes and the streams with almost an infinite variety of fish, and American waters, both alongshore and inland, are said to surpass those of any other nation in the variety and quality of piscatorial foodstuff.

Happily our inland dwellers are not compelled to depend upon sea fish. Finny denizens of the deep shipped a thousand miles not infrequently arrive at their destination in a condition more fit for burial in Mother Earth than in the human stomach.

Plenty of Inland Fish.

Of course under present day refrigerating achievements it is quite possible to ship fish across the continent in a palatable condition unless the cars are sidetracked to permit the passage of beef trust trains. Nowadays sea food is available in all the larger cities of the country at such seasons as the salt water tribes are catchable. But it is too far a cry from the Gloucester coast to the canyon towns of Colorado or the Ozark hamlets of Missouri.

Yet these far inland places and all other such localities, obviously too numerous to mention here, need not despair of getting a fish supply. Colorado has her glittering mountain trout streams. The Ozarks have their gravel bedded brooks and rivers, teeming with fish of many varieties. The great Mississippi, the Ohio, the Illinois, the Arkansas, the Missouri, the Tennessee, the Red river, all furnish a fish supply at the very doors of the inhabitants of the vast Mississippi valley. The Columbia river in the northwest, the Willamette, the Snake and many smaller streams give forth the gleaming salmon, the gay pike and a host of other succulent water citizens for the table. The five great fresh water seas feed fish to millions from Duluth to Buffalo and beyond. The thousands of little lakes in Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota supply residents and resorters. The inland southern states are opulent in fish yielding streams. In short, save on the wide western deserts there is no place in the United States too far removed from water to prevent the people from taking a day off now and then and devoting it to old Izaak Walton's favorite pastime.

Fishing for sport, of course, does not yield food products enough to supply the demand. It is the commercial fishing, an industry of vast extent in the interior United States and along its wave washed edges, that puts piscatorial dainties in reach of "most everybody" most of the time.

Catfish Man's Size.

Commercial fishing is carried on at various points along the Atlantic, Pacific and gulf coasts, the great lakes, the larger rivers, like the Mississippi and the Ohio, and on a smaller scale on lesser lakes and streams. One of the delights of my own boyhood was to visit frequently the fish markets along the levee in a town on the bank of the upper Mississippi and watch the overalled fishermen bringing in and hanging up huge catfish, some of them weighing as much as a man, caught by hook usually, but occasionally by net, in the deeper waters of the stream. These big cats sliced up into steaks make savory dishes for the breakfast or dinner table. One thing that recommends them is that they are absolutely boneless, the backbone and ribs being removed by the marketman.

Other Mississippi fish daintier and more palatable than the channel cat are the buffalo, the crappie and the black and yellow bass. The crappie, which abounds also in the Illinois and other Mississippi tributaries, is to the middle west what the shad is to Connecticut or Maryland. It is pronounced "croppy," but, alas, not always is there a sufficient crop, and the price of this patrician fish sometimes soars so high that the multitude must fall back on the plebeian cat steak.

Catching the Leaping Tuna.

California coast fishing presents elements of curious interest to the tourist from inland places or the far Atlantic shore. Fish eating in California also furnishes novel changes for the tongue of the uitlander from the east. There is a distinct difference between Atlantic and Pacific fish. Off the coast of southern California, in the vicinity of Santa Catalina island, fishermen who have traveled thousands of miles to enjoy the sport may be seen out in boats wrestling with the huge tuna on a hook. The tuna is the big game fish of those waters. In fact, the leaping tuna is about as gamy as any fish that swims, not forgetting the Florida tarpon.

Every year there is a tournament in "Cat" island waters, where honors and prizes go to the catcher of the biggest tuna. With a light rod, reel and line a tuna weighing 251 pounds has been caught there. But the proud Waltonian who caught a jewfish or black sea bass weighing 380 pounds with the same frail tackle discounted the tuna triumph. Then there are in southern California salt waters the barracouda, the pompano, the sand dab, the red snapper and other varieties of small fish not common to other localities, all of which make delicious food and are in the market the year around.

In shellfish the California coast is rich. The native oyster is so small along both the California and the Oregon coasts that a half dozen fries make little more than a mouthful. The flavor also is a surprise, being different from that of the eastern oyster. Gigantic clams grow along these coasts, one of them almost big enough for a meal. There are crawfish camps on the islands off the southern California coast where men engage in the business of catching and marketing huge crawfish, which resemble in taste the eastern lobster. In fact, they turn red like lobsters when boiled, and they are served as lobsters on the bill of fare. California's interior waters are famous for mountain trout, shad, black bass, carp and other varieties, some of which are native and others "planted" in the streams.

Gloucester the Fish Capital.

The most extensive plants of the fisheries industry perhaps are those of Gloucester, Mass., the port for hundreds of vessels that go fishing off the Newfoundland banks. Kipling's famous story, "Captains Courageous," tells much about these fishermen. It is highly interesting to visit the fish wharfs of Gloucester and watch the men boning, salting down and drying codfish, one of the great staples of sea food.

There is no fish trust. There cannot be one, because the supply is so uncertain and the varieties so diversified. Prices vary greatly from day to day and in different sections because of the fluctuations of the supply. It is practically impossible to corner the fish market, for fresh fish put in cold storage would not remain fresh fish. The fish eater never need feel like joining a boycott against the dealers because the price of bluefish may happen to be a few cents higher than it was last year.

Now I am going to close with a fish story which may sound "fishy," but it is true nevertheless. Some years ago I observed a big fishing smack in the Thames river opposite New London, Conn. The boat was netting menhaden, not a food fish, but the raw material for fertilizer. After the haul was made I asked one of the men how many fish they took.

"Two million," he replied.

"Did you count them?" I asked.

"By barrels," said the fisherman. "So many to a barrel, so many barrels—that's how we estimate."

Would Return to Homespun.

Edward P. Lyon, president of the Brooklyn Young Men's Christian association, in a recent address painted a sad picture of the decadence of the old kind of farming, the district school, the large size of the families and the church going spirit in Chenango and other counties of New York state. No longer were people proud to wear homespun, he said. No longer did the milk train permit them to go to church of a Sunday. No longer did the district school thrive, for it was cheaper to haul the children to the town school. And now, he said, few families have more than two children unless a mysterious providence sends twins. And he was sorry for all this.

Dog Has Street Car Pass.

"Mike, a fire dog," mascot of engine company 8, in East Fifty-first street, New York, rides back and forth daily on the lines of the New York city railway on a special pass issued to him, which all the conductors are ordered to honor on sight. Mike is spotted like a leopard and is a high bred Dalmatian dog two years old, the son of the celebrated Oakey, mascot of engine 39, at fire headquarters in East Sixty-seventh street. He was given to the firemen by William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., who raised Oakey in his kennels on Long Island. The pass is engraved on a silver plate attached to Mike's collar, from which also is suspended a miniature fireman's helmet. This is the inscription:

To Conductors:

Permission is hereby granted to carry a fire dog on the cars of this company.

NEW YORK CITY RAILWAY COMPANY.

P. W. WHITRIDGE, Receiver.

The original of the pass hangs in a frame on the walls of the engine house. It was first given to Mike's mother, Bess, but she had it only a short time when injuries received in running to fires made it necessary for the firemen to send her to a quieter engine house on Staten Island. Fireman David Links then escorted Mike to Mr. Whitridge's office to see if the pass could be transferred to her son.

"It's the only pass," said Mr. Whitridge, "of the kind ever issued by the road, and if Mike is willing to take all the risks and not sue the company in case of accident I guess we'll transfer the pass to him."

Mike, who never notices a policeman or any one not in the uniform of a fireman, jumped on Mr. Whitridge's knee and smiled at him just like a politician asking for a favor, said Links. So Mike got his pass. He doesn't use the pass to go to fires, but to go for his meals to the homes of the various firemen.

Seven Guggenheim Brothers and Their Genesis

"Interests" Mentioned In Connection With Ballinger-Pinchot Inquiry Grew From a Swiss Peddler's Pack In Philadelphia.

GUGGENHEIM? Where have we heard that name before? Oh, yes, pretty nearly everywhere since we think of it. The Guggenheims have become almost ubiquitous in the past few years. They have overrun the United States, Mexico, Canada and Alaska and lately have delved into the depths of South Africa. The seven Sutherland sisters gained much notoriety because of their hair and how they got it. The seven Guggenheim brothers are noted because of their gold and how they got it. The Sutherland sisters are not sisters, however, while the Guggenheim brothers are really brothers.

Just now the Guggenheims are a little [illegible] in the public eye than usual. They are, or rather, one of the [illegible] "interests" which stand for [illegible] in [illegible] with [illegible] Richard A. Ballinger, secretary of the interior, who is [illegible] by an investigating committee of congress. There have been vague hints and sly insinuations to the effect that the Guggenheims were the "interests" behind the Alaskan coal and mining land claims which the Gifford Pinchot side of the controversy alleges Secretary Ballinger was too free to grant.

Possibly the inquiry will determine the point. The present interest is in the personality and the performances of the Guggenheims, who constitute perhaps the most aggressive Pleiades of promoters and developers that ever flashed across our commercial and industrial firmament.

One of them, the next to the youngest, is a member of the United States senate from Colorado, but he appears to regard that high position merely as incidental to his career. Such is the ingenuousness of youth with its mouth full of golden spoons.

The Guggenheims happened upon the American horizon only fifty-seven years ago, yet all the seven brothers are born Americans. Isaac, the eldest, was born the year after his father, Meyer Guggenheim, a sturdy Swiss, stepped from the steerage of a vessel in Philadelphia. With Meyer stepped ashore Barbara Myers, a peasant girl whom the Swiss peasant had met in the steerage. There is lovemaking aboard ship, even in the fastnesses of the third class accommodation. Meyer and Barbara made it up between them that they would wed just as soon as prospects permitted. A few months later prospects readily granted the permission.

The young couple settled down in Philadelphia, where they lived happily ever afterward until they removed many years later to a home on Riverside drive, New York. There they lived in increasing happiness with seven millionaires, all their sons, growing up around them. Meyer Guggenheim died in 1904.

The sons are Isaac, Daniel, Murray, Solomon, Benjamin, Simon and William. The father was first a peddler in Philadelphia, saving up money to begin importing lace. He built up the largest lace importing house in this country. As his sons grew up they learned the lace business and promised to carry it on with true Guggenheim aggressiveness. But fate or fortune had in store for them another industrial destiny. Father Guggenheim along about 1888 was induced to invest in some Colorado silver mine stock. Most of such investors sat down and took their medicine when they found themselves bunkoed. Meyer Guggenheim didn't. He traveled to Colorado when he saw the bottom begin to drop out. He took personal charge of his mining interests and discovered that, after all, there were fortunes to be dug out of the ground, blasted from the basalt, gored from the abdomen of the earth.

The elder Guggenheim found it advisable to erect a smelter. He found it advisable and agreeable also to wrench his dutiful sons away from the highly refined lace fabric line and educate them in the handling of crude, plebeian ores. From that first smelter grew what is called the smelter trust by the general public and the American Smelting and Refining company by the Guggenheims, who comprise the seven component parts of the trust.

Later came the Guggenheim Exploration company, an offshoot and concomitant of the smelting company. With smelters strung along from Alaskan glaciers to Mexican wildernesses, the Guggenheims sighed for new worlds to conquer. They perceived that the earth had been merely tickled for minerals. The exploration company became what its name implies—an exploration expedition. It sent its agents into many lands, seeking and acquiring new mineral properties. Wealth grows of accretion. The many millions of the Guggenheims became many more millions.

Simon Guggenheim at thirty-nine years of age was elected by the Colorado legislature in 1902 to succeed Senator Thomas M. Patterson, Democrat. Senator Guggenheim is a Republican. His fight for the seat was furious and fast. It was alleged that he spent half a million dollars in his campaign. He admitted without reservation to a magazine writer that he paid the campaign expenses of many Republican candidates for the legislature, all of whom voted for him. Senator Guggenheim had spent nineteen years as a resident of Colorado, having become the head of the smelter trust. His voice has not been heard very far beyond the senate chamber since he took his seat and not very loudly therein.

It was a pretty custom of the Guggenheims to gather once a year at the parental home in New York in a big family reunion. From Europe, Mexico, Colorado and the other way stations of the smelter trust and the exploration expeditions the seven brothers and their increasing families visited the old home folks and paid their filial respects.

Washington Crossing May Become National Park

Movement to Bridge the Delaware and Acquire Land Where Patriot Army Crossed the River Christmas Night, 1776.

PATRIOTIC America, grateful for the glorious achievements of the fathers, never lets a Washington birthday go by without doing something or attempting to do something still further to glorify the memory of the man who was first in war, first in peace and first in the seat of the mighty now occupied by William Howard Taft. It is interesting to note that President Taft may attend the George Washington Masonic lodge dinner at Alexandria, Va., on Washington's birthday. Mr. Taft will not have far to go, Alexandria being but six miles from Washington, across the Potomac.

George Washington was one of the first master Masons of Alexandria. In that quaint little colonial town, now grown to a thriving manufacturing and residential city, opulent as to historic shrines, the future father of the republic wore the Masonic apron and other emblems at many a lodge meeting. He attended also from time to time the meetings of the first Masonic lodge in Virginia, at Williamsburg, the colonial capital, in an old style house which still stands.

There is an increasing tendency toward the marking and preservation of Washingtonian history spots. Alexandria still has several houses which were associated with Washington, notably the old Carlyle mansion, where merry Sally Fairfax danced with the great general.

But the most notable of this year's efforts toward preserving to posterity a locality intimately associated with Washington and with the making of history is that which has for its object the creation of a national park at Washington Crossing, N. J., the place where Washington and his army crossed the Delaware river on Christmas night of 1776, when, as every schoolboy ought to know, "the river was full of floating ice."

United States Senator Frank O. Briggs of New Jersey is chairman of a board called the Washington Crossing commission, unofficially created and but recently approved by action of the New Jersey legislature, which proposes to ask the national government to acquire lands in the vicinity of the Crossing, build a suitable bridge across the river there and forever preserve the environment as a national park.

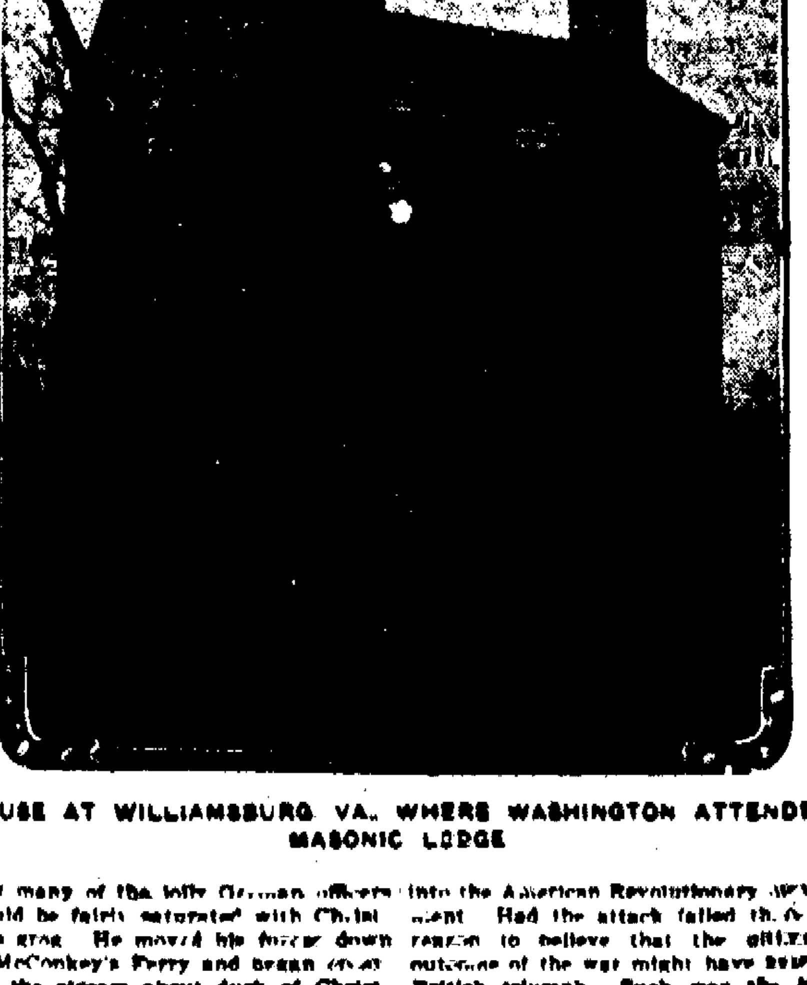

Washington Crossing is but nine miles above Trenton. It was known as McConkey's Ferry until the patriot army crossed the river there. The army had been driven from Long Island, New York and New Jersey, fleeing before the aggressive Cornwallis, who was moving upon Philadelphia, the "rebel" capital. So imminent seemed the capture of Philadelphia that the Americans removed their capital, bag and baggage, to Baltimore.

The commander in chief planned to attack the 1,500 Hessians at Trenton about daybreak on Dec. 26, surmising that many of the jolly German officers would be fairly saturated with Christmas grog. He moved his forces down to McConkey's Ferry and began crossing the stream about dusk of Christmas day. The task was more difficult than he had expected, and it was 3 o'clock in the morning before the final boat load was landed in New Jersey.

Colonel Rall, the Hessian commander, was at ease with his officers after a jolly Christmas night. He sought to rally his men as the outposts were driven in and the main body of his garrison was in stampede. Colonel Rall received a mortal wound, after which he formally surrendered the post to Washington, who magnanimously sought to succor his defeated and dying enemy.

The complete victory put new life into the American Revolutionary movement. Had the attack failed there is reason to believe that the ultimate outcome of the war might have been a British triumph. Such was the importance of this victory that Senator Briggs and his colleagues believe they will have little trouble in convincing congress that Washington Crossing should be made a national park.

NATION'S ISLAND METROPOLIS LINKED TO MAINLAND BY PENNSYLVANIA'S TUNNELS

By ROBERTUS LOVE.

THE approaching completion of the Pennsylvania railroad's new terminal facilities in New York city is a matter of interest to every citizen of the United States. Already a few test trains have been run through the tunnels, now quite completed, and it is promised that some regular trains will be running by April 1, while by midsummer of this year the entire terminal system, tunnels, station yards and all, will be finished and hundreds of trains daily will be shuttled back and forth through this gigantic weave of underground passages under rivers, under cities beneath the keels of seagoing ships beneath the foundations of skyscraper buildings.

Do you know what this will mean? It will mean that passengers can board a train at San Francisco and ride through without change to Boston by way of New York. It will mean that the St. Louisan or the Chicagoan may board a train in either of those cities and ride into the throbbing heart of Manhattan Island, the central borough of the new world's metropolis, without having to be ferried across the Hudson river as heretofore. It will mean that persons living along any one of the hundred and more railroad lines that are comprised in or that articulate with the Pennsylvania system may do likewise.

Tunnels Succeed Ferries.

At present only one railroad has a passenger station on Manhattan Island. That is the New York Central. By a special rental agreement one other road, the New York, New Haven and Hartford, uses its tracks and terminal. But all other railroads leading to New York from north, south and west have their terminals across the Hudson river, necessitating more or less tedious ferriage. Now the Pennsylvania, with an articulation of lines reaching the remotest corners of the republic and with nearly 12,000 miles of railroad belonging to its own system, weaving a network of tracks into the very heart of the nation, is on the eve of completing improvements which will put Manhattan Island and Long Island, practically speaking, on the mainland of the continent.

It is upon Manhattan and the eastern end of Long Island that the principal portions of the second greatest city in the world are built. When the Pennsylvania people were thinking out their plans for these new terminal improvements they figured that the metropolitan area, meaning the section within a nineteen mile radius of the city hall in New York, would have 6,000,000 people by 1912 and 8,000,000 by 1920. Roughly estimated, this area now has about 5,000,000 considerably more than four-fifths of whom reside in the city of Greater New York.

If these computations are correct and conditions seem to justify them, New York within ten years will be the most populous city on the globe. The Pennsylvania has been building not merely for the present but for the future, with its inevitably vaster volume of traffic. When one is confronted by the statement that these new terminals have cost the railroad company from $90,000,000 to $125,000,000 (the approximation varying to that extent) one is astounded at the figure. What? Does it cost a hundred million dollars to build a new depot and bore a few tunnels? And isn't it a wild waste of money? Yes, it costs that much when the acquisition of the necessary land is counted in, and it would be reckless extravagance if the improvements were placed anywhere else in America save the heart of the city of New York.

For whether you like New York or not, gentle reader, whether you ever saw the place or never want to see it, whether you are prejudiced reasonably or unreasonably against its people and its spirit, New York this moment is the greatest city in the world commercially, and, though less than London in population, it far surpasses that city in push and enterprise. New York has been termed "the center of the world."

It should be remembered that New York is a Mecca not only for Europeans, but for Americans, that its cosmopolitan population comprises people from every state in the Union, and that the men who really run New York and who have raised the city to premier importance are not the natives, but "settlers" from smaller American communities. This statement holds good in almost every branch of industrial and professional life.

It is because of this essential and insistent greatness of New York that the Pennsylvania railroad has not hesitated in spending a hundred million dollars, to overcome physical obstacles and run its trains right into the vitals of the metropolis. Ten years ago the late A. J. Cassatt, president of the Pennsylvania, stood at the terminal in Jersey City and looked across the Hudson. He said to an associate:

"I find this sweeping river of our railroad commerce stopped short of its natural outlet by another kind of a river less than a mile wide. Our inevitable objective is the largest and most important city of the country. We stand on our last railroad tie within view of it and cannot reach it. We must find a way to cross."

Cassatt's Dream Fulfilled.

Thus was born Cassatt's dream, now nearly realized, eight years after actual work was begun. Mr Cassatt is dead but his work has been taken up by his successor James McCrea, and carried to success. "A way to cross" was the core of the difficulty. Engineers have turned it into a tunnel core and the way is found. Very modern conditions have made this possible. It would be utterly impracticable to run trains drawn by steam locomotives through six miles of tunnels. The electric engine has solved this part of the problem. Recent improvements in machinery and methods for tunneling made it possible to bore holes under the rivers and the city. Fitted with big steel tubes in sections firmly mortised together and incrusted with a two foot inner layer of cement, these tunnels are as sound and safe as any similar space in the outside world.

The Pennsylvania has two tunnels under the Hudson river and four under the East river, the latter carrying its trains to the enormous yards on Long Island. The Hudson river tunnels run under the city of Hoboken on the west shore before reaching the river. Beneath the entire width of Manhattan Island at almost its widest part the tunnels go, so that nobody will see a Pennsylvania train in New York except below the magnificent pink granite passenger station at Seventh avenue and Thirty-first street.

This station area has sixteen miles of railroad tracks. The building itself is 774 feet long, 433 feet wide, 69 feet high above ground in the main, though it has a central dome over the main waiting room which rises 153 feet above ground. The tracks are forty feet beneath the street level and the principal part of the big "depot" is below ground. The main waiting room is 277 feet long, 103 feet wide and 150 feet from floor to ceiling. The station and trackage area occupy four city blocks, which were covered with buildings when the land was acquired.

For several years the biggest hole ever blasted in the midst of any city has been slowly giving place to this granite railroad station which is a thing of beauty and promises to be a joy until some future day when the stupendous metropolis will have outgrown it utterly. The building is constructed after the Roman Doric style of architecture, its facade colonnades and general aspect giving it the appearance of a gigantic exposition palace. But exposition palaces are built of flimsy stuff, while this permanent and substantial one is made of Milford granite. Some of the interior facing of the waiting room's walls are of marble taken from the bed of the Tiber and the catacombs of Rome, a fact that gives added aesthetic interest to the structure.

All Long Island a Suburb.

The two extra tunnels running to Long Island are for the accommodation of the local population on the island. The Long Island railroad is a part of the Pennsylvania system. Trains will run to Montauk Point, the farthest end of Long Island, with spurs touching all the principal towns making them suburbs of the city.

Shortly before he died Mr. Cassatt estimated the new station's capacity thus: Daily passenger capacity 200,000; yearly passenger capacity 70,000,000; western trains operated through the two tunnels hourly 20 to 30; eastern trains operated through the four tunnels to Long Island hourly 40 to 60. These figures give some slight idea as to the magnitude of the passenger station.

Already the New York Central and New York, New Haven and Hartford roads have electrified their service from a point thirty-five miles from Grand Central station, their terminus. This station is being rebuilt upon a scale almost as grand as the Pennsylvania station.

Recently the writer had a letter from a friend who lives in a small city and does not fancy metropolitan life. This friend wrote: "New York is a good old place, and it is easy to get out of." Verily New York will be easy both to get out of and to get into when these two epoch marking terminal plants begin doing their full day's business—the New York Central at the old stand and the Pennsylvania at the new site.

Women Must "Declare" Cigars.

Collector Loeb has issued a new set of customs regulations for the port of New York which he hopes will facilitate the passing of passenger baggage on the piers and gain for it the reputation of being the best managed port in the United States.

Hitherto men and women have been allowed to bring in free of duty 300 cigarettes or fifty cigars apart from their $100 allowance per head without having to state specifically for whom they were. In future all passengers will have to declare their cigarettes or cigars to be solely for their own use, both men and women. The users must also be more than eighteen years old.

Passengers are also notified that offering to bribe a customs official is a criminal offense. All persons committing such acts are liable to be criminally prosecuted. Any incivility on the part of the inspectors examining baggage is to be reported to the deputy collector in charge of the steamship pier. Women traveling alone are to receive special attention in expedition if they state the fact that they are alone on their declaration.

Foreigners and Americans who have been residing abroad and can prove the fact to the official on the pier will be allowed to bring in all their personal apparel free, and, in addition, their household effects, pictures and statuary, without the stipulation that they must prove one year's residence abroad, as has been the rule.

Confederate Half Dollars.

If you happen to have a Confederate half dollar coin concealed about your person don't spend it or lose it, for it may be worth several thousand dollars. Recently a New Yorker wrote to a newspaper that he possesses one of these coins, of which only four were minted, and said he valued it at $5,000. He thought it was the only one extant. But a few days later Joseph Hyde Pratt, state geologist, living at Chapel Hill, N. C., wrote that he also possesses one of the Confederate half dollars. Still another claimant came forward but his coin has been pronounced a "copy." It appears that four of these half dollars were coined and then the Confederacy changed its monetary plans. One of the coins was presented to President Jefferson Davis of the Confederacy. The New Yorker mentioned says he thinks his half dollar is the identical one which Davis owned.

Americans Fighting in Nicaragua.

The fact that many Americans are fighting in the Estrada army in Nicaragua makes timely the reminiscences of General James Carson Jamison, a fruit farmer near Guthrie, Okla., who was one of the famous filibuster Walker's men in 1856-7. General Jamison was captain of one of Walker's companies and later became adjutant general of Oklahoma. He is in his eightieth year, but his recollection of the stirring events when he fought with General Walker in the Nicaraguan campaigns is vivid, as shown in his book, "With Walker in Nicaragua," recently published. According to General Jamison, the real aim of Walker was to erect an empire in Central America, combining all the five republics, with himself as the first consul or Napoleon of the entire [illegible]. The veteran thinks Walker, who was a native of Nashville, Tenn., might have achieved his dream had he not made war on Honduras somewhat unwisely, the result of which was his capture and execution in 1910. General Jamison tells many amusing things in his book. One laughable incident was the use of a large quantity of solid cheeses by the Americans, who built them into breastworks and fought behind them all day, occasionally, during a lull in the firing, digging into their fortifications with their jackknives and eating cheese.

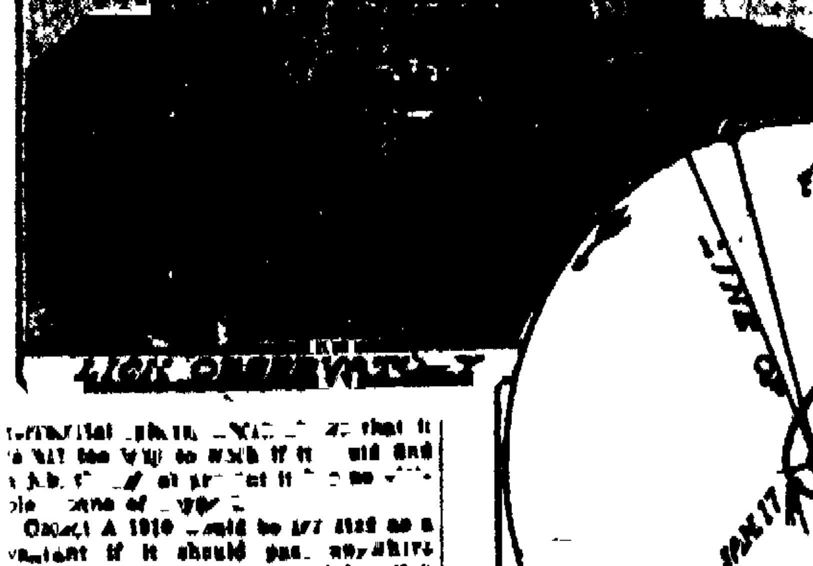

Cortelyou Wants Fewer Laws.

George B. Cortelyou, former cabinet officer, decries the increasing flood of legislation in America. At a recent dinner he quoted statistics to show that last year some 12,000 laws were put upon the statute books of this country. He contrasted this work of our legislative bodies with the comparatively small output of Great Britain. He asked for fewer laws and better enforcement of those that are made. He said that such organizations as the county societies could greatly influence legislation.

Comic Cometic Curiosity Concerning Comet A 1910

T. Sapp, Earthbound Humorist, Calls This Long Tailed Interloper an Eccentric, Erratic Exotic, With No Visible Means of Support

COMET A 1910, as Harvard savants have named our latest celestial skyhooter, belongs to the genus hobo, according to Camille Flammarion, Garrett P. Serviss, the undersigned and other noted or notorious astronomers. It is an eccentric, erratic exotic, scooting through gulfy space at a rate of speed that has ordinary chained lightning frayed to a frazzle. It comes from nowhere in particular and is going nowhere in particular. Just like an earthbound tramp but it travels considerably faster than any Weary Willie of this terrestrial sphere [illegible] that it [illegible] to [illegible] if it [illegible] and [illegible] at present it [illegible] ble [illegible] of [illegible]

Comet A 1910 would be [illegible] vagrant if it should pass anywhere near a policeman with a night club sufficiently long to [illegible] on its head. But there is no [illegible] or [illegible] anywhere on earth which [illegible] where this wandering tail, which is something like 11,000,000 miles long, and [illegible]

There is evidence that somebody, possibly Dr. Innes of Johannesburg, [illegible] A 1910 on the 16th of Jan [illegible] an ineffectual effort to arrest this hobo and give it hours to leave town, for Director Frost of the Yerkes observatory in Wisconsin has reported that the spectroscope shows sodium on the comet's tail. Whether this is the chloride of sodium, otherwise common table salt, is not set forth in the indictment, but I am positive from my own intimate knowledge of human and comet nature that Dr Innes considered this comet a "bird" when he discovered it on the wing and that he tried to catch it by putting salt on its tail.

But the professor also found cyanogen bands on or around this cometic appendage. This proves two startling facts—that Comet A 1910's tail is striped like a barber's pole and that it is self protective, for cyanogen is perhaps the deadliest poison known. A grain of its potassium salt touched to the tongue is sufficient to cause instant death, with no time for writing a farewell message. Fair warning is given. If by any chance this apparently unorbited comet should return to the earth's vicinity be exceedingly careful not to touch your tongue to its tail. Professor Frost tells us how to identify the cyanogen. It is characterized by an odor similar to that of almonds.

The sodium and cyanide bands which encircle the tail of our tramp comet are not visible to the naked eye, but we are glad to know that A 1910 is not a colorless, conventional comet, but takes pride in aviating the infinite garbed in a Navajo blanket of gorgeous hues. There is a suspicion among scientists including the undersigned that this blanket has been stolen from the sun. A 1910 passed perihelion, the nearest point of old Sol, on Jan 17, the day after Innes sprinkled its tail with salt. At that point it was less than 4,000,000 miles from the sun and it would have been easy for one of the outriggers of its widespread tail to snatch off the Navajo blanket as the comet swept past.

At present the comet is about 120,000,000 miles from the sun, so there is little chance for a recovery of the stolen property. The comet, we are told, is now about 155,000,000 miles from the earth, hence we are safe from that almond odored cyanogen peril.

A 1910 is traveling at the rate of forty-one miles a second, 2,460 miles a minute, 147,600 miles an hour, 3,542,400 miles a day. This is considerably faster than the terrestrial hobo travels, even though he catches the blind baggage of the Twentieth Century Limited or the twenty-four hour St. Louisan. The reader will observe that it is pretty difficult to keep track of this comet, for not only does it skyhoot at a most stupendous speed, but it seems to have no fixed orbit. Astronomers at the Lick observatory in California, who are making strenuous efforts to classify and salt down this comet for future reference, say that it seems to be traveling in a parabola, which is an open curve that does not return into itself. From this we deduce that Comet A 1910, whatever else it may be, is not an Australian boomerang.

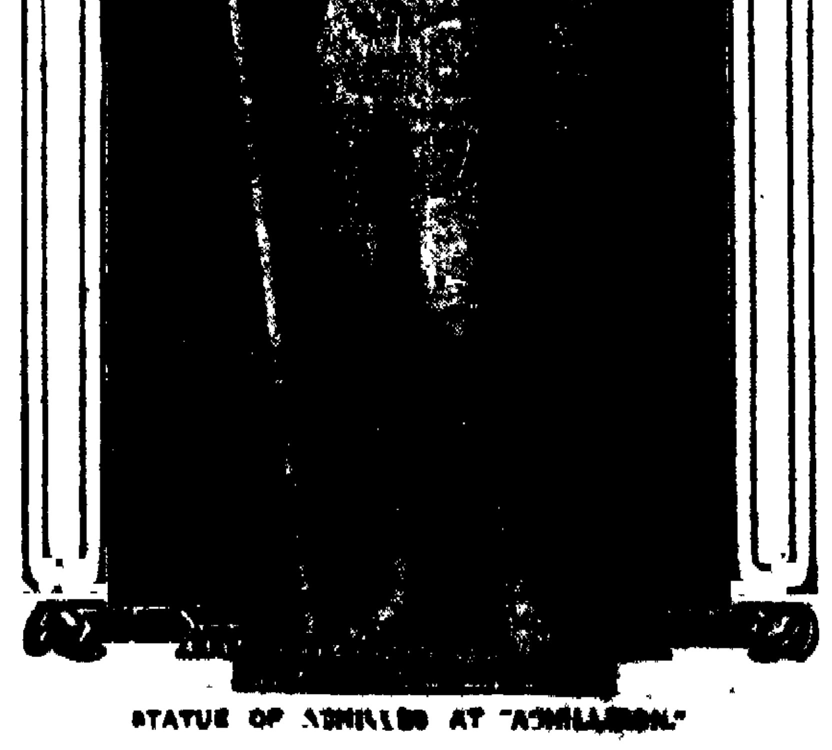

Candor compels me to admit that Professor Harold Jacoby of Columbia university, who spied upon A 1910 with the naked eye from Riverside drive and West Seventy-sixth street, New York, several [illegible] when the comet was close enough to the earth to be thus visible, claims that its orbit has been "roughly found," whatever that means, but, alas, he hints that there is no assurance that it will ever come this way again. So, comet catchers, save your salt for Halley's comet, a highly respectable aviator with a known orbit, which will [illegible] the earth about the middle of May.

But let us not weep because Comet A 1910 is disappearing, perhaps forever, into the vasty void. It [illegible] before it left us. [illegible] Parkhurst and Slocum of the Yerkes observatory made two negatives, which [illegible] positively [illegible] and when color photography is perfected the world will be [illegible] to get a tangible tail hold on Comet A 1910 by [illegible] those [illegible] bands.

Farewell, A 1910, a long farewell, and [illegible]

Kaiser to Unveil Statue of Achilles

STATUE OF ACHILLES AT "ACHILLEION."

WILHELM the war lord, the German kaiser, is nothing if not consistent. The aggressive emperor, who at this moment has a fighting force of 4,000,000 men ready for mobilization in case of necessity, who never has been seen by any of his soldiers with the top button of his coat unbuttoned and never will be seen so, has a strong inclination toward preserving the poetic [illegible].

Just now the emperor is building for himself a new castle on the [illegible] and picturesque island of Corfu, in the Mediterranean, the [illegible] northerly of the Ionian islands. Corfu is a Greek island, with [illegible] of the past and Greek [illegible] of today. For his pleasure palace, appropriately, Emperor William has chosen the name "Achilleion." [illegible] enough to need no identification [illegible]. Derived, of course, from Achilles [illegible] of Homer's "Iliad," this name [illegible] calls for a memorial of its [illegible], so Emperor William has commissioned Professor Goetz, eminent sculptor, to create a heroic statue of Achilles. Professor Goetz has finished his work, and in a short time the emperor personally will unveil the statue.

This work of modern art is nearly twenty-one feet high and will stand upon a marble plinth at Achilleion, about thirteen feet high. The helmet, shield and lance of the Homeric warrior are richly gilded, so that they may be seen from a long distance.

It seems eminently meet that Emperor William should select Achilles for this distinction. [illegible] in literature the supreme [illegible] of [illegible] youth, and the emperor of Germany always has apotheosized the [illegible] virile fighting young man. But there is another point of [illegible] in Achilles which no doubt [illegible] itself [illegible] strongly to [illegible]. Readers of Homer and other [illegible] writers will [illegible] Thetis [illegible] of Achilles [illegible] the infant in the [illegible] his [illegible] to the [illegible] of his [illegible] Thetis [illegible] heels and the [illegible] ternal hand [illegible] dye of [illegible] after [illegible] other [illegible] Achilles [illegible] received his death wound at the [illegible] of Apollo and Paris [illegible] through [illegible] able heel.

PRINCE AHMED: OR, THE PILGRIM OF LOVE.

A CLASSIC IN A PAGE

BY WASHINGTON IRVING 1783~1859

COPYRIGHT, 1910, BY IRVING KING. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.

Prince Ahmed is one of the tales of the Alhambra and Irving himself considered it as one of his most happy attempts at turning out readable stories for English-speaking peoples based upon the traditions of the peasantry of Granada. It is, indeed, a glittering romance, oriental, though the scene is laid in Spain, and in its general sparkle and the pomp of words and pictures presented makes one think of Scott's Talisman, though, of course, the story has none of those more sturdy qualities which made the immortal romance of Sir Walter not only scintillating but massive. One of the most delightful things about the story of "Prince Ahmed" is the vein of sarcasm which runs through it, a sarcasm at times quiet and subtle and scarcely to be detected, and then again breaking forth into as scornful flings at learned prigs and frivolous snobs, at statesmen and statecraft, as the innate good nature of Washington Irving would allow him to indulge in. There is also in the story a well-defined philosophy of life and love, and it will bear reading over many times.

Once upon a time, many centuries ago, there reigned in Granada a Moorish king who had one son whom he named Ahmed and to this name the courtiers added the title of Al Kemel, which means in Moorish the Perfect, and which was bestowed upon the boy not only with a desire to please the king, but because of the indubitable signs of super-excellence which were perceived in the prince from his very infancy. At the birth the royal astrologers were called together, as was customary, to read his future in the stars. These wise men agreed in saying that all the signs were favorable for Ahmed making a perfect prince and a wise sovereign. Only one cloud rested upon the horoscope and even that cloud had a roseate tinge to it. The astrologers said that the prince would be of a very amorous temperament and would run great perils from love. If, however, Ahmed could be kept from a knowledge of love until he was of mature age these dangers would be averted and his life thereafter would be an uninterrupted course of prosperity and felicity.

The king thought this over and made up his mind that the boy should be reared in such a manner that until he was of mature age he never even should hear the name of love nor see a female face. To put his idea into practice the king had a beautiful palace with a great tower built upon the brow of the hill which rises back of the Alhambra. This palace was surrounded by the most beautiful gardens and all inclosed in a lofty wall. In fact, the palace exists to this day and is known as the Generaliffe. So soon as Ahmed showed signs of growing out of his babyhood he was taken to the palace and placed under the guardianship of Ebon Bonabbon, the wisest and the driest Arabian sage that the king could find. Ebon had spent most of his life in Egypt studying hieroglyphics and making researches among the Pyramids and the ruins of those great temples and palaces which lie so thick along the waters of the sluggish Nile.

The most tempting of living beauties did not appear, in the eyes of Ebon Bonabbon, as beautiful as the most leathery Egyptian mummy, and the king felt that he was about as safe a man as could be found in the world for the purpose he designed him for.

"I wish," said the king, "that my son be instructed in all sorts of science, in all branches of knowledge. All save one—he is to be utterly ignorant of love. Use every precaution for this purpose you may think proper, and remember, oh Ebon Bonabbon, if my son learns aught of that forbidden lore while under your care your head shall pay the forfeit."

A smile passed over the withered face of the sage as he replied: "Let your majesty's mind be as easy about your son as mine is about my head. Am I a man likely to give lessons in that idle passion which men call love?"

So the Prince Ahmed al Kamel was taken to the Generaliffe and began his term of splendid imprisonment which was designed only to end upon his reaching his majority. Black slaves, mutes, were the only attendants of the palace, and these hideous creatures knew nothing of love and if they had were powerless to tell about it. Outside of the walls, at a safe distance, soldiers maintained a strict guard so that no one could leave the palace nor any one approach it within speaking distance. As soon as the boy was big enough Ebon began his instructions. The sage was very learned, but, like many learned men, had not the faculty of imparting his knowledge to others in such a manner as to make it interesting. In fact under his treatment the most interesting subjects became as dry as dust.

Ahmed, however, proved a most docile prince, and though he made little progress in the abstruse lore of Egypt—which was Ebon's particular vanity—he listened patiently to the long discourses of his preceptor, strove to stifle his yawns and really did succeed in getting at least a smattering of various sorts of knowledge. His life in the palace was rather lonely, but everything was done to make it as luxurious and as attractive to him as such a life could be made for a healthy and growing boy.

Thus Ahmed attained to his twentieth year, a miracle of wisdom and virtue for a prince but totally ignorant of love. About his twentieth birthday, however, a strange change came over Ahmed. He entirely neglected his studies and spent his time wandering about the beautiful gardens and in musing for hours by the side of the fountains which threw their waters into the marble tanks. Among the other things which Ahmed had learned was a little music, and now he seemed to regard this as the only part of his accomplishments worth while. He would sing and play upon his lute at night, or in the sunset, amid the trees and the flower beds and, worse than all, began to compose poetry. When Ebon observed this last alarming symptom he was greatly disturbed. The sage concluded to take these humors out of the boy by a severe course of algebra.

But the prince turned from algebra with distaste. "I cannot endure algebra," cried Ahmed. "I want something which speaks more to the heart."

"Here's an end to philosophy," thought the sage. "the Prince has discovered that he has a heart."

He now kept anxious watch over his pupil and was convinced that the latent tenderness of Ahmed's nature was aroused and only wanted an object upon which to expend itself. Ebon's head did not seem to sit so firmly upon his shoulders as it had before. And when he discovered that the Prince was beginning to expend his sentiment upon inanimate objects such as flowers and trees he was still more alarmed—for Ebon valued his dry old head.

Ahmed had his favorite flowers which he cherished with tender assiduity. Then he became fickle and turned his love to trees, to which he sang songs as tender as songs could be which had not the word love in them. There was one tree especially of graceful form and drooping foliage, upon which the youth lavished his devotions, cutting his name into the bark, hanging garlands upon its branches and composing poetry to it. Ebon saw his pupil upon the very brink of the forbidden knowledge—th merest accident might reveal to him the fatal secret. The sage resolved upon drastic measures. Since neither algebra nor metaphysics could effect a cure the sage decided to withdraw the Prince from the fatal fascinations of the garden and shut him up in the highest tower of the palace. This tower contained most spacious and luxurious apartments, but was elevated above the seductive atmosphere of the garden. From the tower Ahmed had a prospect stretching for miles and miles across the delightful land of Andalusia.

But he fretted at his captivity, and the sage had to devise some way of placating the imprisonment of his royal pupil. Ebon had exhausted all sorts of agreeable knowledge and did not dare mention algebra again. Then he bethought him of an art in which he had been instructed while in Egypt by a Jewish rabbi who had received it in lineal transmission from Solomon the Wise. It was the language of birds. When he mentioned this study to the Prince Ahmed's eyes sparkled with pleasurable animation, and he applied himself with such diligence to the study of the art that he soon knew as much about it as his tutor. No longer was his prison tower a solitude; he now had companions with whom he could converse continually—creatures of the air, who came flying and wheeling about his prison or made their homes in its crevices and its battlements.

His first acquaintance was a hawk which made its nest in a cornice of the battlements and from that eyrie swept forth, far and wide, in search of its prey. It interested Ahmed to talk with the hawk, but he saw at once that they never could be friends. The hawk was a mere pirate and ruffian of the air, besides being a boastful and swaggering fellow. All he could talk about was rapine and carnage and his own desperate deeds of courage. Then he made the acquaintance of an owl who sat blinking all day in a hole in the wall and wandered forth at night. Ahmed thought he now had discovered a companion who would be agreeable—the old bird looked so very wise that it seemed impossible that conversation with him should not be improving. But the owl proved to be as much of a bore as Ebon Bonabbon. He talked ponderously of astrology and the moon, hinted at dark sciences, and was given generally to metaphysics.

There also was a bat which hung all day in the dark corner of a vault and went out at twilight in a slipshod style. Ahmed found that the bat was as bad, or even worse, a companion than the hawk or the owl. He had no very definite views on anything, and seemed to delight in nothing but denouncing things of which he had taken only an imperfect view. People like this bat can be met with every day in the human world, as, indeed, there are to be met with, also, men like the owl and the hawk.

The swallow, with whom Ahmed now made acquaintance, also has many a counterpart in the world of men. For he was a smart talker, but restless and forever on the wing, seldom remaining long enough in one place for intelligent conversation. He turned out in the end to be a mere smatterer who did but skim the surface of things, pretending to know everything, but knowing nothing thoroughly. These were the only associates with whom Ahmed had, at first, an opportunity of exercising his new attainment, for the tower was too high for the other birds to frequent, especially at this season of the year. The Prince deplored the fact that the ability to talk with birds, which he had at first thought was to bring him so much pleasure, had only resulted in adding three other bores to Ebon Bonabbon.

But now the winter passed and spring came, filling the hills and vales of Andalusia with warmth and sunshine, life and light and love. The trees and flowers put forth their leaves and blossoms, and, as the season advanced, the valley of the Darro, which the tower overlooked, and the delicious gardens of the Generaliffe and the Alhambra, which lay on the slopes of the plain, were gay and gorgeous. Then came the melody.

"Allah Akbar, God is great!" exclaimed the sage, "who shall pretend to keep this knowledge from the hearts of men?" Then he besought the prince for his own sake to think not of love, for love was the cause of half the ills of wretched humanity. Care and sorrow, sleepless nights and strife were its accompaniments. He begged him to dismiss the deadly thought from his mind.

But Ahmed could not dismiss it, although he tried. If love was the cause of so much woe as his tutor said, why were not those birds which sang of it tearing each other to pieces or sitting in mournful solitude? One morning as he lay upon his couch, and the morning breeze came gently through forms of the mountain spur upon which the two great palaces stood, began to breathe forth the fragrance of flowers and to sound by night and day with the music of singing birds and the plash of fountains which sparkled in the light of the sun or softly shimmered beneath the rays of the moon. The time had arrived for the birds to pair and build their nests and from the gardens below his tower the prince heard break forth one universal song from groves and gardens which mingled with the sweet breath of the flowers, arose to the balcony where Ahmed, with wonder, looked down upon the world below. For now he knew what the birds were saying over and over again in their songs—knew but did not comprehend. For always they sang of love.

And what was love. "What can it be—this love," he said, "of which the world seems so full and of which I know nothing?" He called to the hawk, when that pirate of the air alighted for a moment on the battlements to cast his eye over the scene below in search of a possible victim, and asked him "What is love?" Scornfully the hawk replied: "Ask of the humble birds of the earth, the lowly prey for us princes of the air. I am a warrior, fighting is my delight, and I know nothing of this thing called Love." The hawk darted off with a great sweep of strong wings to seize a victim in the valley below and the prince sought out the owl and asked him: "What is this love of which all the birds are singing in the gardens below? You are learned, solve the question which perplexes me."

But the owl replied: "My nights are taken up in study and my days in ruminating within me all that I have learned. As to those singing birds of which you speak, I have never listened to them. Allah be praised, I cannot sing. In a word, I am a philosopher and know nothing of this thing called Love."

When he interrogated the bat upon the same question he found him the most unsatisfactory of all. "Why do you disturb me in my slumbers?" cried the creature, "Love indeed! I fly only by twilight and never trouble myself with the affairs of birds. I am neither bird nor beast myself and am thankful for it, for I have found out the villainy of the whole of them and hate them. I know nothing of this thing called Love."

As for the swallow, he replied to the prince's question with: "Upon my word what have I to do with such a trivial matter. I have so many important things to attend to every day, so many matters to inquire into that I have no leisure for the words of little songbirds. I am a citizen of the world and know not love."

When, a little later, old Ebon Bonabbon entered the apartment and the prince suddenly asked of that venerable dry-as-dust "What is love?" the superannuated sage nearly fell dead in his tracks.

When he had sufficiently recovered himself he felt his head to see that it was still upon his shoulders and then exclaimed: "What could have suggested such an idle word to my prince? Where could he have learned it?" The prince led the old man to the window of the tower and said "listen?" From grove and garden came the same song—as old as the world—of Love, Love, Love. A nightingale sat below in the garden singing to the rose, and from the open window a beautiful dove, pursued by a hawk which had wounded it, came fluttering into the apartment and dropped exhausted by his side. He soothed the wounded bird, put it in a golden cage and offered it the finest wheat to eat. But the bird was inconsolable. Ahmed said, "What alleth thee? Hast thou not everything that heart could desire?"

"Alas no," replied the dove, "for I am separated from the partner of my heart and that, too, in the happy springtime, the very season of love."

"Of love!" exclaimed the prince, "then canst thou tell me what is love?"

The dove began and discoursed so eloquently of the joys of the great passion that Ahmed's heart was inflamed and he took the bird from the cage and let it go, envying it its destiny.

When Ebon came in to see him the prince reproached him for keeping him in ignorance of the meaning of love and showed by his words that he had at last learned, in theory at least, what that passion was. Ebon was dismayed, but told the prince the whole story of the reason of his prolonged captivity and also begged him on his knees to keep the fact of his discovery from the knowledge of the king, as the king surely would carry out his threat with regard to the sage's head.

"Ah," said the prince, "every created being rejoices in its mate. I only am debarred from the experience of a knowledge in which I find even the meanest insect is so learned." But the prince was as reasonable as could be expected of a youth of his years and besides, he really had a high regard for his old tutor, so he promised to confine to his own breast the knowledge which he had acquired.

But one day came flying in at his window the dove which he had released that it might return to its mate. "Happy bird, that can fly on the wings of the morning to the uttermost parts of the earth, where hast thou been and what hast thou seen?"

Then the dove told him: "I bring the tidings as a reward for my liberty." It told how, flying one day over a valley near a city, it beheld below a fair garden surrounding a great palace. About the garden and the palace was a great wall guarded by many soldiers and in the garden was a young princess in the very sweetness and bloom of her years. She was surrounded with many female attendants, who decked her with garlands and strove to sooth her melancholy. She was fairer than all women, but was a prisoner there, even as Ahmed was a prisoner in the tower, and for the same reason.

The description of the princess was as a spark upon the combustible heart of Ahmed. He wrote a letter filled with all the poetry and passion of his pent up feelings and gave it to the dove. The dove soared high in the air, circled around once or twice, and then took an undeviating direction. Day after day the Prince watched for the return of his messenger and was beginning to despair, when one day the faithful bird came fluttering in at the window and, falling at his feet, expired. Some wanton archer had pierced its breast with his arrow. As the Prince bent over the dying bird he saw around its neck a string of pearls, to which was attached a small miniature. It represented a beautiful princess in the very flower of her years. Ahmed was enraptured.

It was doubtless the fair girl of the garden. But who was she and where did she dwell? Unfortunately the death of the dove left this in doubt and mystery. The Prince apostrophized the picture in the tenderest terms and pressed it to his lips. "I will fly from this tower," he cried, "and as a pilgrim of love will I wander the whole world over but I will find thee." He now went to the owl, told him the story of his love for the unknown damsel and promised him that, when he came to the throne of his father he would, if the owl aided him, advance that wise bird to some lofty rank. Though a philosopher and above the ordinary wants of life, the owl, like other philosophers, was not above ambitions and agreed to help the young man in his little love affair. Many another high-placed statesman has risen to power by like methods.

The owl advised the prince to repair to Seville where, in a tower, dwelt a wise raven many centuries old, a soothsayer and a conjurer. The owl agreed to be Ahmed's guide to the abode of the raven, and that very night the Prince, collecting his jewels and concealing them about his person as traveling funds, lowered himself by his scarf from a balcony of the tower, clambered over the wall, eluded the guards and set off with the owl as the Pilgrim of Love. He traveled only at night to suit the convenience of the owl, and by day the two reposed themselves in caves and ruins, for the owl knew every secret place of that sort in that section of Spain. At last, one glorious morning, they saw before them the wonderous city of Seville, and, rising above the houses as a palm tree towers over the shrubs of the desert, the stately tower of the Giralda—the famous Moorish structure which, for so many centuries, has been the envy of architects and the delight of all lovers of the beautiful.

It was in this tower, in a chamber at the top, to which he ascended by a winding stairway, that the Prince found the venerable and cabalistic raven of which the owl had told him. The raven greeted his visitor with a croak, and when he found that he could talk "bird talk," said: "So, I suppose you come to have your fortune told? Well, let me see your palm and read the lines of destiny."

"Nay," replied Ahmed, "I am but a Pilgrim of Love and seek but to find the object of my pilgrimage."

The raven leered upon the young man with a single eye which age and accident had left him and replied: "And can you be at any loss for an object in amorous Andalusia? Above all in Seville, where the wanton, black-eyed damsels dance the zambra under every orange grove?" The Prince blushed and felt inexpressibly shocked to hear an old bird with one foot in the grave discourse thus loosely.

"Believe me," he said gravely, "I seek no such end to my pilgrimage."

And then he told the wise and wicked old bird the whole story of his life. "Hum," said the raven when he heard the tale, "my visits are not to young and beautiful princesses as a rule would that they were. I can give you no information concerning this beauty of yours. But hie thee to Cordova; seek the palm tree of the great Abderahman, which stands in the center of the court before the principal mosque. At the foot of that tree shall you find a wise traveler discoursing. Listen to what he says and then obey his instructions." And, ending with a sarcastic "Farewell, Pilgrim of Love," the raven returned to his studies.

Seeking his fellow traveler the owl, who had been dozing in a hollow tree outside the gate of the city, Ahmed started for Cordova. He found it the city embowered amid groves of orange, citron and cypress trees and those beautiful hanging gardens which extend along the banks of the "dreamy Guadalquivir" and made the fair valley a vale of paradise. He found the mosque and the palm tree. But though about the tree were gathered many dervishes and faquirs he saw no learned traveler, only a parrot who, clinging to the tree, was discoursing with great volubility.

"How is this," he inquired of one of the bystanders, "that sensible people stand here and listen to the idle chattering of that bird which merely repeats echoes of the ends of human speech which it has heard?"

But they told him that this was no ordinary parrot—the bird really thought for itself and said things original. Also that he was a great traveler. Ahmed sought a private interview with the red and green bird and disclosed to him his errand. "Upon my word," cried the parrot and burst forth into shouts of laughter. "Pray, thee, where hast thou learned this sentimental jargon? Do you not know that love is quite out of vogue? Excuse my mirth, but the mention of love always sets me laughing; the thing is never mentioned in really polite society." Nevertheless the Prince handed the miniature to the bird of the world and asked him if he knew the original. The parrot took the picture in one claw and after regarding it awhile handed it back with the remark: "Why, it is the Princess Aldegonda! How could I for a moment forget her who is such a prodigious favorite with me? But you will get no sight of her. Her father, the king, has her shut up in a palace into which no man may enter."

"Just one word," replied Ahmed. "I am a prince, the son of a great king, and if you help me to an acquaintance with the princess some day, when I mount the throne, I will advance you to a high and responsible position at court."

"It is a bargain," responded the bird, "but let it be a sinecure; we wits love not work or responsibility."

So it was all arranged and Ahmed, accompanied by the owl and the parrot, sallied forth from Cordova bound for Toledo where reigned the Christian king, whose daughter was the fair princess Aldegonda. They journeyed across the sunburnt plains of La Mancha and Castile and made their way through the stern passes of the Sierra Morena, and then along the banks of the Golden Tagus, until at length, before them they saw a great and strong city, set upon a rocky promontory and dominating the plain below with walls and towers. "Behold," exclaimed the owl, "the ancient city of Toledo, a city famous for its antiquities. Behold those domes and towers hoary with time and clothed with legendary grandeur."

"Pish," cried the parrot, "behold rather the abode of youth and beauty—behold, Prince, the abode of your long-sought princess." Ahmed looked in the direction indicated by the parrot and saw, in a delightful green meadow on the banks of the Tagus, a stately palace rising from wall-incircled gardens—the very palace described to him by the gentle dove which had lost its life bringing him the message from his love.

"You," said he to the parrot, "have the gift of human speech. Fly to the palace, seek the Princess and tell her that Ahmed waits." Off flew the parrot to return presently with the news that he had found the Princess, had delivered his message and that she had fainted upon receiving it. Then, "Oh, joyful tidings," had she cried. "Hie thee back; tell him that the words of his letter are engraven on my heart. Tell him, moreover, that he must be prepared to prove his love by force of arms, for tomorrow my father holds a great tournament. Many great princes are to enter the lists and my hand is to be rewarded to the victor." The Prince was enraptured. Then suddenly his heart froze. This impending tournament! Already, as he looked, he saw the level space by the palace on the banks of the Tagus begin to be active with the preparations for the morrow's tournament. Across the plain swept many proud knights and great princes, followed by their glittering trains, making their way to Toledo, with blare of trumpets and sounding of kettle drums. Steeds pranced, armor shone and plumed crests glanced in the bright air above the sheen of spears and the flash of steel.

And poor Ahmed, reared in seclusion, knew not the noble science of arms and, if he had known it, had neither horse nor armor to take his part with that gorgeous assembly. He began to lament his fate when the owl interrupted him: "Wait not, on, Prince! Know that in these mountains are many secret caves, and many magic secrets are locked up in them. In these mountains there is a cave, and in that cave is an iron table. On that iron table lies a suit of the finest armor, magic and spellbound. Against the table reclines a spear enchanted like the armor. Near to the table stands a steed, also enchanted and spellbound. These have been shut up there for many generations—in fact, ever since Toledo was captured by the Christians. This armor, this spear and this horse were left there under spell by a Moorish necromancer at the time Toledo fell, never to be used except by a Moslem, and by him only from sunrise to midday. But in that interval whosoever uses them will overthrow every opponent."

"Enough," cried Ahmed. "let us seek this cave."

The next morning upon the vega, or plain, below the cliff-built walls of Toledo, the chivalry of Spain came forth to do battle for the hand of the most beautiful princess in the world. Around the lists were built stages and galleries for the spectators of various ranks, covered by awnings and hung with rich tapestries. All the beauties of the kingdom were assembled in those galleries, but all the beauties of the land seemed plain before the marvelous beauty of the Princess Aldegonda, who had been brought forth from her retirement to grace the tourney. She sat on a chair of state, surrounded by her maidens and decked with the utmost magnificence. Below her pranced upon their chargers the princes who were to contend in the tournament, for none but those of princely rank, the heralds made proclamation, were to be allowed to break a lance within those splendid lists.

The princess, however, wore a troubled look. She saw the flower of royal chivalry ready to combat for her hand, but it seemed to afford her no satisfaction, for among those assembled she saw not the unknown stranger to whom she had given her heart. She heard the herald announce them all, but not the name she longed to hear—the name of Ahmed, Prince of Granada which the dove and the parrot had told her was the name of her Pilgrim of Love. The trumpeters were about sounding the charge when a strange knight rode into the field. A steeled helmet, studded with gems, rose above his head, his cuirass was embossed with gold; his cimeter and dagger were of the workmanship of Fez, and flamed with precious stones. A round shield was at his shoulder and in his hand he bore the charmed lance. The caparisons of his proud charger were richly embroidered and swept the ground, while the fiery animal pranced and snuffed the air, neighing with joy at once more being permitted to take part in deeds of arms.

The lofty and graceful bearing of the rider struck every eye, and when he announced himself, in response to the inquiries of the masters of the lists, as the Pilgrim of Love, many a gentle breast heaved a sigh and many a gentle heart was fluttered in that bright throng of female loveliness which graced the galleries of the lists. Only princes, he was told, were admitted to the combat. Ahmed—for of course it was he announced his name and rank. The cheeks of Aldegonda flushed and her eyes sparkled. At last! But it was decided that none but a Christian prince might compete for the hand of a daughter of a Christian king, and the other princes surrounded Ahmed with haughty and menacing gestures. One prince, huge of stature and insolent of speech, sneered at the pretensions of the slight youth to do combat with men inured to the exercise of arms. Ahmed turned his steed and, taking distance, challenged the Herculean knight to come on. They charged, and at the first touch of the magic lance the scoffing giant lay prostrate in the dust!

Here Ahmed would have paused. But he was mounted on a demonic steed, which for centuries had not been out of the stable, and felt the need of exercise. The lust of combat was awakened in the charger, and Ahmed was powerless to control him. All that he could do was to try and keep his lance aimed true while the enchanted charger rushed pell-mell about the field, strewing it with every one who dared oppose. The princes were one by one unhorsed, the knights who came to the rescue were likewise thrown down; the troops ordered out to stop the fierce career of the magic horse were dispersed. High or low, it made no difference, any one who dared oppose the career of that enchanted horse or encounter the touch of the magic lance—down they went. The king stormed and raged, and finally, when his own guards had been overthrown by Ahmed, himself threw off his kingly robes, put on his armor in haste and rode to do battle with the disturber of the peace. Ahmed was terrified, and least of all would he have charged against the father of Aldegonda. But he had no choice. Straight against the king the steed rushed and down went his majesty.

Just at that moment the sun reached the meridian. The magic steed paused. Then, swift as the wind, still bearing his astonished rider on his back, he sped back to the cave in the mountain side and left Toledo to wonder and lament at what had taken place. When Ahmed recovered his breath and his wits he was curious to know what effect upon his prospects of possessing the hand of Aldegonda this riotous proceeding of his borrowed horse had wrought and, as it was night, he sent forth the owl to see. The owl returned with the tidings that the princess was much prostrated and was attended by many physicians. She declared that the Prince of Grenada had won her hand and from time to time drew forth from her bosom a letter which she kissed. Her father now had her a prisoner in a tower of the palace and would not listen to her plaints. As for Toledo, the city was a prey to uneasiness and alarm. By the advice of the owl Ahmed disguised himself as a traveling Arabian physician and sought the palace. Knowing that these Arabian physicians were skilful in the use of medicaments the king allowed him to see the princess, and Ahmed contrived to reveal to her secretly his identity.

The princess began to recover right away, and the king was so pleased that he declared the successful doctor might demand from him any reward within the compass of his treasury. Ahmed told him that it would be necessary for him to make one more visit to his patient on the following day, and that he would then name his reward. Repairing to the cave he again took counsel of the owl. "Well," said the owl, "there is in the treasury of the king a simple chest which contains only a carpet. I have this from my father, who lived long among the dark places of the royal palace of Toledo. But this carpet, unsuspected by the king, is the magic carpet of Solomon the Wise. Ask that and if you receive it you shall know what to do with it."

So the Prince named as his reward next day the chest containing the carpet, and the King, glad to get off so easily, had it brought forth. Ahmed spread the carpet upon the terrace, and, standing upon it, asked that the Princess might be brought forth to say farewell to him, since he would venture no more to intrude into the royal apartments. Aldegonda came, she stepped upon the carpet, Ahmed uttered a magic word told him by the owl, and wished that they two, himself and the Princess were in Granada. Off flew the carpet, swifter and more reliable than any modern aeroplane, and before one could say Jack Robinson Ahmed and Aldegonda alighted in the valley of the Darro, and wondering subjects surrounded the lost heir to the throne of Granada. The King of Toledo suspected that a trick had been played upon him, and suspected who had played it. He summoned a vast army and marched for Granada. When he appeared before the city the King of Granada himself came forth with all his court to meet him, his musicians sounding a parley. In the King of Granada the King of Toledo beheld the prince who had devastated his field of the jousts and also the Arabian physician who had carried off his daughter.

He was easily pacified, though, when he found that his daughter was allowed to continue in her own faith and was to become the wife of such a powerful King. Ahmed's father, it appeared, had died soon after the return of his son, and so instead of battles before Granada, there were successful fetes and rejoicings. As for the owl and the parrot, they followed Ahmed by easy stages to Granada, and the King kept the word the Prince had given (which of itself is a marvelous thing), making the owl Prime Minister and the parrot his master of ceremonies. It is needless to say that never was a kingdom more easily administered or a court more punctiliously conducted. Long, happy and prosperous was the reign of Ahmed and Aldegonda, and now they sleep with their fathers, and their memory is a treasure possessed only by the peasants of Granada and Toledo.

CHIVALRY BLOOMS GAYLY.

From the Chicago Tribune.

Who says that valor is dead? Who maintains that the days of chivalry are no more, that knights no longer live who pin their ladies' kerchiefs on their breasts and go forth to face dragons or the caitiff foe? If such there be, let them consider Slatter of Virginia, Christian name and post-office unknown. He offers to marry Carrie Nation. All other valorous deeds sink into insignificance beside this deed. Even the great faunal naturalist now tearing Nairobian lions limb from limb and eating them raw appears like an arrant coward compared with Slatter of Virginia.

WANTED—MALE HELP.

IF you don't like your work, read this advertisement clear through.

You can't lose your position in the navy if you behave. Pay day always comes in good or bad times. No strikes. No lay-offs.

You always get the same splendid things to eat, and plenty of it, whether the cost of food is high or low.

You always have warm clothes and a clean, warm, comfortable bed, and a warm living room in the day time. In fact, the fleet spends most winter days in tropical waters.

If sick, you have the finest medical care free. If disabled you get a pension. If you stay in the navy thirty years, you can retire on three-fourths pay for the balance of your life.

Work isn't hard and average pay of enlisted men is $35 per month. At end of month you have $35.00 left, as navy pays nearly all your living expenses. In civil life do you have $35.00 left each month? And there's splendid chance of promotion to Chief Petty Officer at $77.00 per month, or to Warrant Officer, at $1400.00 per year, with nearly all expenses paid.

Some save enough money while in the navy to start in business for themselves. Others have stayed in thirty years, saved small fortunes, and retired on three-fourths pay.

Should you return to civil life, you'll find yourself an able fighter in the great game of life, for navy physical training makes you strong, erect, athletic. And navy life educates you by showing you some of the United States—may be some of the world; by throwing you into the company of educated officers and fine young men; by teaching you a trade, perhaps, and by giving you much time for study. Four navy years are better than four college years, many think.

Go to a Recruiting Office today. Have a private talk with the officers and bluejackets there. You'll find them glad to see you and ready to tell you everything. If you don't join that makes no difference. They won't urge you to. Go and see them today—not tomorrow—today. You'll be glad you did. Nearest Recruiting Office to you is Postoffice Bldg., Pueblo, Colo.

If you can't go, write for a free booklet which tells everything about a bluejacket's life, in a simple, interesting way, and is full of pictures.

Just think what a small bit of trouble it is for you to get a pencil and post card and write for this book. Think what this small bit of trouble may do for you. It may put you on the road to your life's success. Don't put it off. You'll forget it if you do. Send for it now. Also send names and addresses of four or five boys you'd like to have join the navy with you. We'll send them books, too. Bureau of Navigation, box 23, Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

WAR ON THE SPARROW

But Biological Survey Says Its Flesh Is Very Palatable.

From the New York Evening Post.

Persons living in Bloomfield, Haworth, Summit, or other villages about New York, must not be amazed if they find their next door neighbor out on his lawn on a frosty night with the garden hose unreeled, and discharging a jet of icy water into the crevices and eaves of his house. Nor must he be astonished in the warm spring nights to come if his usually sedate neighbor is discovered discharging small Roman candles into the vines he has sedulously cultivated and draped over his front veranda. He will only be seeking to drive out the English sparrows, after a method suggested by the biological survey, and published by the department of agriculture as a farmers' bulletin.

It is a new thing to find the biological survey the enemy of any bird, but the scientists of the survey wholly and unreservedly condemn the English sparrow. They say that in its economic relation the English sparrow, among birds, is comparable to the rat among mammals, and call it cunning, destructive and filthy.

As an incentive to the thrifty householder to destroy English sparrows, Ned Dearborn, of the biological survey, urges that their flesh is palatable and nutritious, and in city restaurants they are often served under the name of "reedbirds." English sparrows are not protected by law in the United States, and may be killed by any means anywhere at any time, and in any numbers.

The English sparrow was introduced into the United States about 60 years ago, and is now distributed generally over the eastern seaboard and Southern Canada and locally westward to the Pacific coast. This rapid dissemination is a result of the bird's hardiness, extraordinary fecundity, diversity of food, aggressive disposition, and almost complete immunity from natural enemies through its sagacity and its preference for thickly settled communities.

PRINCESS OF INDIA BORE TO BE EXTENDED.

Kansas People Provide Funds for Development of Two American Sisters and Other Mines.

GEORGETOWN, Colo., Feb 26.—Through the efforts of the heaviest stockholders in the Two American Sisters Mining, Milling, Power and Electric company work will be resumed in the near future in the development of the American Sisters mine on Columbian mountain. A great majority of those interested reside at Salina, Kan., and during the last few weeks several meetings have been held with a view of securing the necessary funds to carry forward the proposed work

A working fund of $25,000 is said to have practically been pledged. If plans do not miscarry it is proposed to proceed with the driving of the Princess of India tunnel, the portal of which is situated near Lawson This bore is now in a distance of 1,000 feet and from surveys the American Sisters vein will be reached within the next 1,200 feet. The vein would be intersected under the flat of the mountain and it has long been the opinion of mining men that the richest ore ever taken from the property will be found at this point

There can be no question regarding the continuity of the ore shoots of the section This has been demonstrated from the development of the Jo Reynolds mine, the vein of which runs parallel with the American Sisters. Some of the richest ore yet mined from the first named mine was taken from the deepest workings, while the ore bodies have been remarkable in extent.

In the event that the Princess of India tunnel is continued to the American Sisters vein, it is understood that the owners of the Jo Reynolds mine stand ready to proceed with the advance of the bore until their property is intersected. This would result in the Two American Sisters company realizing a handsome tollage.

Conqueror to Ship.

J. C. Sturdevant, manager of the Conqueror Mining and Milling company, operating the Conqueror mine on Covode mountain, states that he is fast getting the workings in condition for ore extraction and that inside of another month heavy shipments will be in order. At present the 50-ton mill is not being operated, but there will probably be sufficient water flowing through the pipe line at an early date to permit of the operation of the machinery. The adit tunnel is being driven steadily forward, being now in a distance of 1,200 feet. A fine body of mill ore has been followed for 500 feet, with occasional small streaks of high-grade smelting ore being encountered Within another month the working force will number about 35 men.

Good headway is being made in the driving of the Colby tunnel, the portal of which is located on Saxton ... vein. During the last week another vein has been intersected, but until the hanging wall has been reached it will be imp...le to foretell the full extent of the discovery. However, ... attered ore is ...ing clear across the breast, and indications are favorable for a rich body of ore shortly being found.

A number of lessees at the Seven-Thirty mine are making small shipments, the ore in each case being of high grade. Shipments are being made by Anderson & Co., Shapiro & Co. and Tavaltti & Co., who are at work on the first, second and third levels respectively.

Concentrates are delivered from the Capital, Alice, Mill lots and Linn mills, the last named plant having sent forth the largest tonnage. Had it ... for ... another car ... C. SUGAR LOAF DISTRICT SCENE OF ACTIVITY

OPERATIONS PUSHED ON THE SAGUACH TUNNEL

New Machinery Installed — Rock Hill, Adelaide Park and Printer Boy Hill Busy Sections.

LEADVILLE, Feb 26—After many weeks of effort the electric compressor on the Saguach tunnel in the Sugar Loaf district has been installed and is ready for operation.

The tunnel itself is now in the hill a distance of 600 feet By means of the new plant it is expected that from 200 to 300 feet per month can be cut The bore is 6½ by 7 feet in the clear and cut as smooth and straight as good machinery and expert mechanics can make it A boxed water course carries off the drainage A track of 30-pound rails extends right up to the breast.

This enterprise has been promoted and financed by the National Mining and Milling company, an organization of eastern capitalists J F. Horner has charge of all the work and expects to reach the objective vein of the operations before the end of the present year

Many improvements have been made on the Stone property of the LaPlata group on Rock hill during the last few weeks This property is under lease to William Hurley and associates Hurley has been working there for several months and has taken out considerable ore. He has a good sized body before him and with his improved facilities will be able to attack it quite rapidly

Activity at Adelaide Park.

One of the busy properties of the Adelaide park district is the Humboldt, which is operating under two sets of lessees

On one of the upper levels Hinckley and associates are shipping 200 tons or more per month of good lead ore to the smelter They have had this vein for several months and have good prospects for almost indefinite operations through it. They have also carried on much development work.

Christ Jacobson and associates are now working on the lower level of the Humboldt. They are drifting for ore and expect to soon be shipping some themselves The same vein that has been worked through the upper levels, it is believed, extends in their direction

Printer Boy Producing Gold.

Andrew Hill has completed the erection of a plant of machinery on the Printer Boy mine on Printer Boy hill This was made necessary on account of the heavy demands on the old plant since a vein of gold bearing ore was encountered He is now hoisting ore with the new plant and is regularly shipping a good grade of material to the smelter. The product consists of a good grade of gold ore, also bearing lead The Printer Boy is one of the historic mines of the district and has produced heavily. Hill believes that it can be made to yield considerable treasure before it is played out He has worked it steadily for several months and has been meeting with success almost from the start

The gallows frame and other surface improvements recently installed on the Colonel Sellers property in California gulch have been completed and are now being used. Ore is hoisted regularly.

In the meantime the work of sinking the new Colonel Sellers shaft west of the Iron Silver boundary line is progressing. When it is completed an additional output can be maintained

The Lovejoy, on Printer Boy hill, is also producing now This property is working under the management of H. J Hersey, who has been prosecuting vigorous developments there for the past eight or 10 months A gold bearing ore is mined The product is hauled to the Moyer switch at Oro, a mile or so distant.

WAR DANCE SHIPPING ORE OF HIGH GRADE

Operations Resumed by Lessees After Settlement of Litigation in Their Favor.

CENTRAL CITY, Colo, Feb. 26—McKay & Co operating the War Dance mine in lower Russell district, made a shipment during the last week to the Chamberlain sampling works, which gave them returns of $205 26 for the first-class ores, while the second-class went $46 to the ton Since the decision of Judge Cavender of Leadville last month which was in every particular favorable to the lessees they have taken out several lots of better than average ores

Local lessees are at work in the 100-foot workings of the West Whiting mine on Gunnel hill, taking out a good sized tonnage of milling ores which net them from two to four ounces gold per cord, besides tailings. Their smelting product ranges from $40 to $80 per ton The property is operated under a lease from the Gunnell Gold Mining and Milling company

A local pool is developing the Ready Cash mine in Eureka district under a lease and bond from T H. Potter of Denver They have installed machinery and put up a new shaft building In sinking they opened a streak of smelting ore giving values of one ounce gold, 152 60 ounces silver and 60 per cent in lead, or a total value of close to $150 per ton. The lessees expect to develop the property into a regular shipper

Superintendent William A. Auger of the Pittsburg mine has received an assay on ore from a new shoot just uncovered in the 800-foot level of that property which, it is stated, showed values of 130 41 ounces gold, 17.60 ounces silver and 4.50 per cent copper, a total valuation of $2,560 a ton. He said the streak was six inches wide of yellow and gray copper-iron mixed with fine looking quartz, but in the sample assayed no free gold was visible The shoot was found after drifting through 190 feet of barren ground, and is showing up well

Denver people are interested in a rich find made during the past week on the S. S M group of claims, situated north of Wide Awake and between the Golden Flint and Perigo mines. Development work has been carried on through tunnel workings this winter and the tunnel is now in a distance of 100 feet and shows a streak of honeycomb quartz, alongside of which there is a smelting streak of three and four inches of fine copper-iron Assays have ranged from as low as $4.25 to $89 40 a ton until the last few shots disclosed an extra fine looking streak and an assay made last, it is said, showed values in gold of 208 62 ounces, or a commercial value of $4,171.40 a ton Some free gold is visible and the ore is being carefully sorted and will be saved for a future shipment

100-BARREL OIL WELL.

FOULDER, Colo, Feb. 26.—After 24 hours of pumping the new well of the Fidelity Oil company indicates an output of at least 100 barrels per day. On account of a lack of tankage, pumping was suspended and until the new tanks are in place it will be impossible to ascertain just what the well will do

TO DEVELOP SPRANKLE GROUP

EMPIRE Colo Feb 26 An important new mining enterprise of the district is the resumption of operation of the Sprankle mines by the Knickerbocker Mining and Milling company. A plant of machinery is now on the ground and is to be erected on the Silver Mountain shaft, from which a drift will be driven at the 230-foot level into the Sprankle ground. William Hogle, manager for the company, stated that the exploration of the property will be conducted systematically and to such extent as may be necessary to determine the location and extent of ore bodies The mines are among the oldest and best known in the Empire district

DRUID WILL RAISE

Contract Made for Important Operations in Connection With Newhouse Tunnel.

IDAHO SPRINGS, Colo, Feb. 26—A contract for driving 1,100 feet of the lateral east on the Aduddel vein from the Newhouse tunnel has just been completed and the work of blasting out for a station 1,500 feet east of the Newhouse tunnel will now be started, at which point a raise of 1,500 feet will be made to the surface The work is being done by the Druid Gold Mining company, which owns the Church placer and a number of lode claims covering a large area of valuable mineral ground The Aduddel-Searle vein has yielded more than $1,500,000 from surface workings The showing along the lateral is exceptionally good, especially at the point where it was determined to put through the raise. The vein lies at an incline which will facilitate raising, and connection with the surface will probably be completed before the end of the year J F Vaile of Denver is interested and Max Boehmer of Denver is consulting engineer.

A good body of medium grade ore has been opened up in the winze of the Chicago-Belle claim. Superintendent Jaynes brought down two samples which gave returns of 1 04 ounces in gold, 34 ounces in silver and 6.30 per cent in copper, making a value per ton of $50 40. The ore is a fine quality of quartz, but it is yet in the oxidized zone and the values are not as large as they will be when the winze has been sunk to a sufficient depth to get beyond oxidization.

PRICE OF PORK HIGHEST SINCE THE CIVIL WAR

Provisions Outstrip Grains in Advances at Chicago—Wheat Futures in Demand.

CHICAGO, Feb. 26.—May wheat fell off from 1-8 to 1-4c today and the distant deliveries advanced in about the same degree. Corn and oats were easy and provisions advanced from 10 to 30c influenced by an improved demand and the prevailing high prices for live hogs. May pork made a record price of $24.30.

Repetition of the recent crop damage reports was the principal bullish factor which was responsible for a slight advance in the price of distant futures in the wheat pit. Much of the other news of the day was of a bearish quality, including a weak demand for cash wheat and large arrivals. Foreign markets failed to respond to a marked degree to the late advance in wheat prices here yesterday and were ignored in the pit. On the whole the market was quiet, fluctuations varying from 1-2 to 5-8c. July moved between $1.07 3-4 and $1.07, closing at $1.07 3-8@$1.07 1-2, 1-8@1-4 up. May touched $1.14 7-8 and sank to $1.14 1-8. September copied July rather than May. The close was generally steady with May at $.14 1/2, 1-8@1-4c lower than the final figures yesterday.

Heaviness marked the course of the corn market throughout the session. May moved between 66 1-8 and 65 5-8 and the other months showed less mobility. The close was steady with May off 1-8@1-4c at 65 3-4.

Trading in oats was featureless throughout the day. Price variations were from 1-4@3, May selling 47 1-4@48 3-4. The close was steady at from unchanged to 1-8 off. Final figures for May were 47@1-8, 1-8c lower than the last quotation yesterday.

Provisions easily outstripped grains and ruled uniformly higher. May pork in particular made a sharp advance and touched $24.20, the highest point since the Civil war. Lard and ribs also made good advances. The principal factors in the advance were continued high prices for live hogs and small arrivals at the packing centers. Closing prices for the May products were: Pork, $24.20, 22 1-2c up; lard, $13.07 1-2, 10c up and ribs $12.75@$12.77 1-2, 13 1-2@15c higher.

OPEN VEIN IN BLACK BEAR.

SILVERTON, Feb. 26.—The Black Bear people have the vein they have been running for since last summer and the mineral looks like good milling stuff. They had to run 1,100 feet for it from the Bradley vein. They are in about 1,000 feet on the 1,200-foot crosscut that they are driving for the Iona people and are making good progress daily. Since the mill has been shut down the price of lead and zinc have both gone up, and when they start their mill up again next month it will be under more favorable circumstances than for some time.

EMBROIDERED SHIRTWAIST DESIGN

Drawn by Sarah Hale Hunter

WHEN using this printed design from the paper, the directions are as follows:—

If the material [illegible] is very sheer, the [illegible] way is to lay it over the design, which will show through plainly, and draw over each line with a hard, sharp lead pencil. If your linen is heavy buy a piece of impression paper, the kind that does not rub off, lay it on your material, place the design over it, and trace with a hard pencil. You will find the design neatly transferred and ready to be embroidered.

In [illegible] be [illegible] or solid if preferred. The [illegible] should be [illegible] in the [illegible] stitch, [illegible] in the outline stitch.

The [illegible] with the cross [illegible] is done in the Italian cut work, which consists of a [illegible] buttonhole stitch.

The mat[illegible] is cut away, and the [illegible] left.

A narrow [illegible] can take the place of the cut work if desired. Mercerized [illegible], No. [illegible], should be used for the [illegible].

Stencil Border Design

By Grace Evans

THIS stencil was designed for a border, but is suitable for articles such as table runners, bureau scarfs laundry bags, oblong sofa pillows and curtains.

A table cover made of burlap or monk cloth, which is the same texture only softer, is attractive.

Made in tan or a soft shade of blue or green, with a three-inch hem and the design placed above, done in a [illegible] shade of the same color, is very [illegible]tive. For instance, if the cloth is tan make the design a rich shade of brown.

A laundry bag [illegible] of Russian crash, which may be had as cheap as ten cents a yard and decorated with the design done in delft blue, is pretty. Old corset steels may be used for the top. It makes the bag firmer and more easily opened.

This design is intended for those who wish to make their own stencils. It is really a very simple matter and requires no special skill.

The easiest way to make it is to cut it out of cardboard. There is a special kind of board prepared for this purpose that costs very little, but any kind of thin cardboard will do quite as well.

Trace the design given here on the cardboard. This is done best by the use of impression paper or carbon paper. It is inexpensive and may be used over and over again for all sorts of transferring.

Put the transfer paper under the design given here, and place both of them upon the cardboard.

Then with a hard pencil or sharp pointed instrument, trace the outlines of the design. You will find these outlines clearly marked on the cardboard.

If you are a beginner, I would suggest that you darken the portions to be cut out, otherwise you are likely to cut the wrong parts as there are so many little pieces in the design needed to hold the stencil together.

The cutting is done with a sharp knife, the small blade being best. If you place the cardboard on a piece of glass you will find the cutting easier and more exact. When using other cardboard than that specially made for the purpose it is well to rub it over with sweet oil. This not only makes it waterproof, but easier to cut.

After it is cut, varnish it on both sides with shellac and be careful that none of it collects in the corners.

Now the stencil being complete you are ready to use it.

In decorating your material place several layers of newspapers on a single piece of blotting paper under goods to absorb all superfluous color. Stretch the goods over ironing board or table and pin closely along the edges. Then pin the design on material.

When you have painted one part of a repeated pattern see that in removing stencil the edges will not blur.

Before repeating the design the exact position where each repeating piece is to be placed must be decided upon and marked by pins, or lightly with pencil so that the work will be properly arranged.

Change the upper layer of newspaper every time you shift your pattern, so the color absorbed will not blur or stain the new material.

Apply the color quite thinly, using a separate brush for each color.

Be sure to have at hand a small piece of cloth wet with benzine or turpentine to wipe the stencil for it is absolutely necessary to have your stencil clean on both sides.

The next thing to consider is brushes. Almost any kind of brush or round bristle will do. The size depends on the pattern. A separate brush must be used for applying each color.

As almost any color can be had by mixtures of red, blue and yellow, these three are necessary to have at first. It is best to use transparent colors such as burnt sienna (brown), rose madder which comes in four shades, and cadmium (yellow). These colors are mixed with turpentine or naphtha until it is like a stain.

The naphtha is preferable for goods of delicate texture. The turpentine causes the color of the goods to fade if the material is too delicate.

And that leaves only the question of materials to consider. These may be of almost any kind or quality but some fabrics are much easier to use than others. Cheesecloth is very popularly used for sheer material but has the disadvantage of being very shrinkable. Unbleached muslin of a creamy color can be acceptably used. The coarse texture cannot be quickly treated, for the color has to be slowly rubbed into the fiber.

Resting the Skin

There is a famous beauty who has kept her complexion longer than most women through the simple expedient of resting her skin. In speaking of this somewhat novel idea she said:

"The reason women have such racked-looking complexions, especially in the Spring, is because they do not seem to realize that the skin gets tired along with the rest of the body.

"What are tired wrinkles or that drawn feeling that most of us have when overdoing. Nothing but a tired-out skin crying for rest.

"How do I give this rest? That depends upon how tired I am.

"If I have been out in strong March winds for instance I often rest my skin with a shade of lettuce leaves. I take the big outer leaves of a head of lettuce, dip them in boiling water in which is dissolved a few grains of borax, or better yet a little cologne, and place them over my face as I lie down for my half hour rest.

"Another way I rest my skin after a walk in the wind is to wipe it off carefully with a mixture of rose water and glycerine as soon as I come in the house. This is in proportion of three parts of former to one of latter. This mixture removes dust and germs, yet does not chap the skin as water will."

Miss Hunter's Correspondence

Workbox.

Jane J.—A unique workbox is made by covering a small tea chest with dull blue [illegible] or [illegible], stretched to fit [illegible], and held in place by a row of small brass-headed tacks, placed closely along the edges of all four [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] to make a diamond-shaped figure on top and sides. Small brass handles are screwed on two opposite sides, with small brass corners for a pretty finish on the lid. A brass hook is used to [illegible] the top down. And the inside of the box lightly padded with cotton batting and lined with white sateen.

Brush Holder.

Margaret P.—A case to hold tooth and nail brushes can be made in this way. Half a yard of ribbon, plain or fancy, three inches wide, will be required, cut to a point on one end. A piece of oil silk, the same size, is basted to the ribbon, and feather-stitched together entirely around on the right side, with silk to match the ribbon, first whipping neatly together the ribbon and oil silk at both ends. The straight end of the ribbon is turned up long enough to hold the brushes, and the edges whipped to the side and featherstitched down the center to form two pockets. The pointed end is turned over like a flap and fastened with button and loop.

Belt Design.

Mrs. F. S. W.—I am sorry that I cannot give the belt pattern immediately, but will do so when there is space for it. Many requests for patterns come each month and should, of course, be answered in turn.

Darning.

Mrs. Samuel R.—Linen should be darned on the wrong side of the material. The long running warp stitches being put in first, following the thread of the linen, and taking care not to draw the stitches too tight, and to leave a small loop at each turn of the thread for shrinking. After the warp stitches are all put in, turn the linen and run the woof threads. The warp and woof stitches should lie so close together as to appear almost a part of the original material.

Queen Anne Darning.

Maude.—Queen Anne darning is made by running rows of threads parallel at equal distances apart until the space to be darned is well covered. These parallel threads are then crossed at right angles with other rows of threads, also at equal distances apart, weaving them under and over the other threads until the space is filled. If a solid effect is required the threads both ways should be placed as closely together as possible.

Popular Articles.

Emily.—I am sorry that I cannot make use of the pattern you write about. I think the articles would sell well at an exchange, as small and original articles, which are inexpensive, are always popular.

Powder Bag.

Florence W.—A dainty powder bag to slip in one's satchel is of pink or pale blue silk, crocheted in a pretty design and mounted over a silk bag, the same shade. A circular piece of cardboard, covered, is used on the bottom of the bag and the bag lined with chamois. A piece of silk is left at the top of the bag for a casing and a frill. The chamois lining need only reach to the lower edge of the casing. Ribbon is run in the casing for drawing strings, and a dainty little powder puff slipped inside of the bag.

Not Useful.

Mrs. S. M. L.—The design you ask for would be useful to so few people that I am unable to give it. I hope you will send in another request that would be more popular, and I will be delighted to draw the pattern.

Baby's Cap.

Mrs. King.—A dainty baby cap of fine white material may be made in this way. The strip for the front cut about two and a half inches wide, upon which is worked a row of featherstitching in the form of S-shaped figures with French knots or tiny dots on each side. The other part of the cap, back toward the crown, may be of small hand-run tucks with a row of featherstitching between each one.

The crown can also be tucked and featherstitched to match the rest of the cap. Lace insertion may be used to join the tucked part to the front which has been featherstitched with the S-shaped figures. A ruche of lace finishes the entire edge. And when the strings are joined to the cap, rosettes of soft ribbon are used.

Coat Set.

W. L. S.—I will give the coat set of collar and cuff with pleasure, but can not tell you just when it will be published as so many requests have come before yours.

Shirtwaist Design.

Mrs. O. W.—Several shirtwaist designs to be worked in coronation braid have been published, but I shall be glad to give others in the future.

To Mrs. A. B.

I am sorry that I am unable to send you the pattern for the alphabet. I do not fill any private orders.

The Well-Dressed Woman

Freshening Our Clothes

By Marian Morris.

AT this [illegible] of the year one's [illegible] which have been worn [illegible] all the Winter [illegible] their fresh appearance.

It is not [illegible] to consider [illegible] and suits may be sent to the cleaner's or tailor's to be freshened and even furs may be made to [illegible] like new under skilled treatment.

But as the majority of us will be saving our [illegible] for new Spring and [illegible] clothes, I am going to tell you how to give them new life at home, and [illegible] I have learned from a [illegible].

[illegible] begin with the tailored suit, [illegible], as it is worn more than any [illegible] will doubtless require [illegible] than that. First go over [illegible] of it thoroughly with a good [illegible] brush and remove every particle of dust.

[illegible] any grease spots, clean [illegible]. This may be applied with a [illegible] white muslin cloth or a small nail brush.

On many of the lighter weight and colored materials, benzine will spread in a ring around the spot which has been obliterated. To remove this, lay over it a coating of powdered chalk or fuller's earth. Allow it to remain on for an hour or two, after which it may be shaken or brushed out and the spot will be found to have disappeared.

Still another method is to apply ammonia diluted with water. Cover with powdered magnesia, rubbing it in with the finger. Leave until quite dry, brush out the magnesia and the spot will have vanished.

If the buttons are made of the cloth and are beginning to look shabby, cut off and put on new ones of bone.

There is nothing which will impart to a suit such a new look as fresh collars and cuffs. Dull finish silks, such as moire, soft faille and silk cashmere, as well as velvet, are much used for this purpose, and as both collar and cuffs are now soft and unstiffened, they are much easier for the home sewer, who has not had practical experience.

To put on, make four inch or deeper cuffs, simply lining with the silk. Set on the end of the sleeve, or about three inches above the end, in the new style, and fasten with a row of buttons up the back seam.

In facing the collar use a bias strip of the material. Baste in place and then sew the edges with blind stitches.

If the skirt is worn at the lower edge, cut through the turn of the hem and turn up the hem on the under side. Unless your skirt is unusually short, this will not make a noticeable difference in the length. Then finish the skirt with a new binding, sewing the top with hemming stitches and holding in the lower edge with long running stitches through the binding and material.

The suit is now ready to press, and this part of the work can be done easily at home, if you have a good iron and a pressing board.

If there are any plaits in the coat or skirt lay them in the correct depth and run with [illegible] stitches to hold while you are [illegible].

Take a white [illegible] cloth that has been thoroughly dampened and lay this over a portion of the skirt or coat and begin to press, using a hot iron. Press every portion of the suit, redampening the cloth as it dries before placing it on another part.

[illegible] your furs are looking dingy, for dark furs become soiled as well as light ones, [illegible] it in a dull lustreless appearance, begin by going over them [illegible] with a coarse comb, combing [illegible] and shaking out from time to time.

Next pin [illegible] out flat upon an upholstered chair, place it out of doors, and beat with a flat rattan beater. You will need to beat each article from an hour to two hours and a half—gently, not harshly or violently—so as not to injure the fur. Your furs will then commence to look fresher and more "alive."

If the fur still seems dingy on the surface, rub with cornmeal, and a coarse grade is best, or better still, if procurable, use sea sand, which has been warmed in an oven. You will be surprised to see how much dust [illegible] out with the cornmeal and how bright and glistening your furs will become.

Rub the meal or sand thoroughly into the fur, shake out and rub in more until perfectly clean.

In cleaning white fur or ermine, white cornmeal if preferable. Heat it a [illegible] by putting it in a pan in the oven. Then rub it into the skin and shake out frequently. When the meal is no longer soiled as it is shaken out, the furs will be quite clean. There is no better way than this for cleaning white furs.

One should always remember to handle the furs gently [illegible] beating and shaking them out, as it is easy to rip or tear the skin, [illegible] if the furs are old and partly worn.

If the ends of a fur muff are worn through to the skin, cover with a four-inch deep double band of velvet set on as a cuff and turned back over the [illegible] of the muff.

The [illegible] beautiful and [illegible] furs are trimmed this [illegible] with ribbon and velvet, and this will not only hide the worn portion, but give a very smart touch to your furs.

If you [illegible] to [illegible] ribbon, lay it on in folds, [illegible] it [illegible] the upper [illegible] to the lower edge at the center, and finish with a large bow.

While speaking of furs, I must not forget to tell you about a [illegible] and pretty way in which you can fix up our fur coat.

Pony skin coats especially wear off easily at the edges, where the coat is constantly being buttoned and rebuttoned and at the end of the sleeves. Buy an inch wide fancy black or brown silk Hercules braid, whichever color your coat may be, and use it to bind the edges of the coat around the collar and down both sides of the fronts, the sleeves and openings in the back, and if needful, the lower edge.

You will be amazed to see what a new and pretty look it will give to your [illegible] and the coat, I assure you, will be [illegible] trivial in comparison with the bill one would receive from the furrier for this kind of work.

White beaver and felt hats which have been so fashionable this Winter and which add so much charm to a pretty face, are usually [illegible] over by the economical girl because of their tendency to soil easily. They may be made like new with very little trouble.

It is best to remove the trimming if possible, or else tie it up in a white cloth so that it will not be injured in the cleaning process.

Apply to the hat equal parts of magnesia and French chalk. Rub thoroughly into the beaver, then put the hat away in a covered box or wardrobe to protect it from the dust. Take [illegible] a couple of days, shake and brush out the powder with a clean, soft hat brush. If not perfectly clean, repeat the process.

In cleaning a white felt hat a mixture formed of naphtha and powdered magnesia may be applied to form a paste. When dry, remove it with a stiff brush.

MODISH FILLETS FOR THE HAIR

THE fashion for elaborate coiffures insures the popularity of the various charming fillets shown in the shops. So dainty and tempting are the fancy creations for the hair and adapted to all [illegible] and conditions of femininity, that [illegible] involuntarily stops, admires and purchases without counting the cost.

Illustration No. 1 shows a charming fillet of blue maline intertwined with blue velvet forgetmenots and with a smart maline aigrette at the side.

One and one-half yards of maline with some "body" to it, one small bunch of forgetmenots, and a ten or twelve inch length of flat white hat wire will be required, to make this dainty hair ornament.

Fold and refold one yard of the maline into a long strip until it measures five by eighteen inches; then in turn plait back and forth crosswise into one-inch plaits.

Sew [illegible] together at one end and holding the plaits at the other end tightly in place, cut them into a point, which, when released, will flare into a smart [illegible].

[illegible] the remaining half yard of maline [illegible] around the flat wire; [illegible] it at intervals of about one and [illegible]. Wind the bunch of forgetmenots [illegible] clusters of five or six [illegible] and place over the [illegible] on the maline. [illegible] one end of the [illegible] pin, and to the other end attach the maline [illegible] with a circlet of forget-me-nots and leaves at its base.

Illustration No. II shows a fillet of pearl beads with pearl cabochons at either side. Cover a strip of white hat wire with white silk or satin ribbon. Sew four twelve-inch strings of small pearl beads about one inch from the one end of the fillet of satin. Twist the bead strings into a coil or rope and fasten one [illegible] from the other end of the satin fillet.

For the cabochons, cut two circles of crinoline about one and one-half inches in diameter and cover with satin.

Next add a coil or spiral of [illegible] starting at the center of each satin circle, working round and round. As you near the outer edge, "coil" the circle [illegible] to a smaller diameter, making it slightly cup-shaped.

Cut two [illegible] and sew to [illegible] to give a [illegible] one to [illegible].

The [illegible] fillet with poppies [illegible] in the [illegible] is [illegible] attractive when worn [illegible] the hair [illegible] at the [illegible], so that the [illegible] will [illegible] the [illegible] to the puffs or [illegible] of hair.

Three [illegible] of a yard of inch-wide red velvet ribbon and a bunch of silk poppies to match will be required.

Make a [illegible] at the center [illegible] of the ribbon band. Separate the [illegible] of [illegible]. Make a tight [illegible] of poppies at [illegible], and a cluster of poppies [illegible].
